Real Idaho wages decline

By BILL LAZARUS
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Inflation and taxes have more than stripped away all the wage gains made by Idaho workers over the past 10 years. Since 1966 average earnings of non-agricultural workers in Idaho have "jumped" more than 77 per cent.

But inflation has almost kept pace, rising over 74 per cent. The combination of inflation and higher taxes has caused the average Idaho worker's paycheck this year to have slightly less purchasing power than his paycheck had in 1966.

The situation in Idaho nearly parallels the national trend. The nation's average wage-earner's paycheck can buy about as much now as it could 10 years ago. For many families, however, the picture is rosier. In Idaho, average family income shot up 63 per cent between 1969 and 1975, well above the 47 per cent inflation rate which occurred during the period. An increase in the number of working wives is one reason given for this trend. Even so, the purchasing power of the average worker in Idaho has declined each year since 1966 except for 1970, when a sharp increase occurred, and this year when the increase has been more modest.

The net effect is that, despite some fluctuations, the Idaho worker has just about as much in "spendable earnings" as he had 10 years ago.

In contrast, between 1966 and 1976 the average Idaho worker's purchasing power rose about 13 per cent.

Idaho economists and economic analysts express little surprise at the lack of real growth in the average Idahoan's paycheck during the past decade.

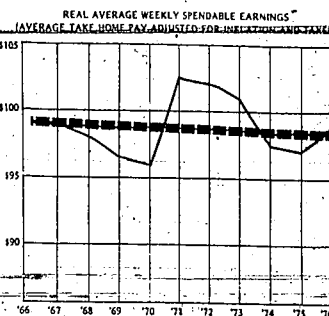

"I'm not surprised... Just personally I felt that this type of thing was happening to me and other people in like circumstances."

"I don't feel I'm better off than eight or 10 years ago. I feel the pinch as much now, maybe a little more so," says A.C. Beeman, chief of the Idaho Employment Department's Bureau of Research and Analysis.

In addition to inflation, Beeman says, there is an often unnoticed loss stemming from higher taxes caused by inflation.

"As wages go up, you go into higher income tax brackets, too. There's a kind of loss there that people don't realize. They get a raise in pay and they also get a raise in the rate of their income tax," he says.

Losses over decade

REAL EARNING have fallen in Idaho during the past 10 years, according to the Idaho Department of Employment. While the average worker's paycheck has risen, taxes and inflation have risen even faster, bringing a slight reduction over the decade in the buying power of the average worker. Figures are expressed in 1967 dollars.

US bombings rise but injuries fall

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The number of bombings in the United States increased sharply in 1976, but they caused fewer deaths and injuries and less property damage than last year, the director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms said Saturday.

In a year-end report using estimates for November and December, ATF Director Rex Davis said his bureau investigated more than 1,000 explosive or incendiary bombings this year, compared to 871 in 1975.

Altogether, explosives cases under investigation — including bomb attempts, threats and hoaxes, accidental bombings and thefts of explosives — increased 26 per cent from 1,622 last year to 2,272 in 1976, he said.

The greatest number of cases, 263, occurred in California, he said. There were 203 incidents in Ohio and 138 in Kentucky. But the fewest, 2 apiece, occurred in Nebraska and North

ATF regulates the explosives industry and investigates about 70 per cent of the bombings in the United States, Davis said.

Davis said bomb threats and hoaxes increased significantly this year, but he was "especially alarmed by the increase in bombings."

He said there was a drop in deaths, injuries and property damage caused by explosions in the past 12 months.

"When final figures are tallied for 1976, it is expected that about 52 persons will have died and 239 persons will have been injured as a result of explosions," ATF said in a statement. "Figures for 1975 record 69 deaths and 328 injuries." Property damage due to explosions in 1975, nationally, totaled $27 million. The bomb estimate for 1976 is $13 million. Arrests for explosives violations rose about 15 per cent, Davis said.

Hollister man slain

HOLLISTER — A 31-year-old Hollister father of six was killed by a bullet in the back early Christmas Day at his home here, Twin Falls County Coroner Cloyce Edwards reported.

The man, John H. Richardson, was shot from "close range," and was dead in his kitchen when the coroner arrived about 12:45 a.m., Saturday, Edwards said.

The shooting was the result of a family argument, a sheriff's deputy reported.

Richardson, his wife, Penny, and several of their children were the only persons at home when the shooting occurred, the deputy said.

No arrests have been made. The deputy said the county prosecutor will decide Monday whether an arrest should be made.

Richardson worked for Nelson's Builders as a truck driver. He attended Twin Falls schools. (Obituary, p. 2)

Yuletide plea

CHRISTMAS DAY was marked by Christian celebrations of the Birth of Christ throughout the world. Here, Pope Paul VI issues a call for a "new spiritual humanism" which he said transcends man's intoxication with "scientific progress and social evolution." He spoke to more than 250,000 people crowded into St. Peter's Square in Rome. (UPI)

Politics disrupts China food output

HONG KONG (UPI) — Agricultural production in six of China's 26 provinces "suffered serious disruption in the past few years" because of political struggle that sometimes turned violent, the New China News Agency reported Saturday.

It said "the polarization of the rich and poor" was reemerging.

Quoting Vice Premier Chen Yun-kuei, in a report to a national conference on agriculture now underway in Peking, it said the situation became so bad in one part of Chekiang Province that people's communes were broken up and the land divided.

His report laid the blame for disruptions in agricultural production on Chiang Ching, the widow of the late party Chairman Mao Tse-tung, and three of her radical associates — Chang Chunchiao, Wang Hung-wei and Yao Wen-yuan. All four were purged in early October.

A separate report by a Communist Party official in Chekiang, broadcast over the provincial radio, also gave details of the trouble in Chekiang's Wenzhou Prefecture. That report was made by Chen Tsolin, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee.

The vice premier's report was delivered to the agricultural conference last Monday and the text was transmitted Saturday by the official New China News Agency. Chen Tsolin, also a member of the party's powerful bureau, is considered one of the country's leading agricultural experts.

"Agricultural production in the six provinces of Yunnan, Kweichow, Szechuan, Fukien, Chekiang and Kiangsi has suffered serious disruption in the past few years," Chen Yung-kuei said.

"In Wenzhou, the most affected prefecture, the situation in many places deteriorated to such an extent that the land was divided up and the commune members had to go it alone. Polarization of rich and poor re-emerged, black markets became rampant and the collective economy disintegrated."

Chen Tsolin's report said that "capitalism became rampant" in some parts of Chekiang,

"particularly in Wenzhou" where the situation "became chaotic."

"This situation repeatedly occurred and became increasingly serious. Agricultural production throughout Wenzhou Prefecture was seriously sabotaged and many factories, mines and enterprises there once stopped work and production. Capitalism prevailed on the non-stop food market and class enemies seized the opportunity to make trouble."

The vice premier's report to the national conference said the "class enemies became arrogant" and party cadres who tried to maintain the integrity of the communes were attacked.

Those who work on Christmas Day

Not everyone can enjoy a cozy Christmas Day with family and friends. People such as telephone operators and policemen must remain at their posts to make the holidays enjoyable for the rest of us. Times-News photographer Lou Freese also was on the job. His photo salute to Christmas workers appears on p. 15.

Prisoner gets wish — Christmas in jail

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Bobbie Ferguson, who was born in prison, returned home for Christmas this year — the closest jail he's ever been to.

Ferguson refused to leave the Salt Lake City County Jail during an annual holiday release program saying, "I have never been out of prison at Christmas. I've never spent it in a home. I wouldn't know where to go."

Ferguson has spent 40 of his 43 years in jails and institutions and once petitioned the governor of Iowa to give him a life sentence. But Gov. Robert Ray turned him down.

"I never had a family, so prison is like a family to me," said the inmate, who currently is serving 90 days for assault.

He said the Salt Lake City County Jail is "as good a place as any I have been. The people seem friendly. And those who have worked with me seem to care."

Ferguson was born in the Rockwell City, Iowa, Women's Reformatory, where his mother was an inmate. But he never met her. When he was two days old, he was taken to the Woodward State Hospital for the Epileptic and Feeble-minded.

"How many two-day-old infant can be either epileptic or feeble-minded, I don't know," he said. "But for 14 years, that's the education I got. I learned how to mop and buff floors, wash windows — any job for the feeble-minded."

Ferguson said he began running away when, at 15, he was sent to a home for the elderly. Eventually he ended up in the Iowa State Prison for five years. But he managed to extend his term for 20 years by committing crimes and deliberately getting caught.

"I was scared," he said about his first release. "I didn't have any place to go. I walked the streets for three days. Then I stole a car to get back in."

Stealing cars was his favorite crime. Only he didn't drive them. He said he just went to a parking lot and sat in an auto until the driver returned.

"With my record, I only had to sit in a car to get convicted," Ferguson said.

But the inmate thinks he's finally had enough of life behind bars. When he is released Jan. 3, Ferguson said he would like to settle in Utah and learn a trade.

"It's reached the point where I can't be scared any longer," he said. "I'm getting too old to run away or run back to prison. A man reaches a point where he wants to do something with his life, and I've reached it."

A wide band of clouds is moving inland and bringing quite a bit of rain and snow in the northern half of the state at this time. Some showers of rain or snow are expected into the southern half of the state today.

A vigorous but weakening

Carters celebrate in traditional way

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — Jimmy Carter gathered his family — minus one — together for a traditional Christmas celebration today, mindful that presidential responsibilities are looming less than one month away.

"Miss Lillian," Carter's 79-year old mother will be absent because of some arthritis discomfort which has forced her to a nearby hospital for treatment.

But that wasn't expected to stop the clan from bringing Christmas to her during the day.

"Miss Lillian," who traditionally invites her family to a grills and sausage Christmas breakfast, had to forego that annual festivity this year, but gift-bearing family members visited the hospital in nearby Americus, Ga., to make the occasion a special one.

For the president-elect it was a day of many celebrations.

Christmas dinner was planned at noon in the home of Rosalynn Carter's mother, "Miss Allie." The holiday feast included turkey, ham, cornbread dressing, rice with giblet gravy, cranberry sauce, ambrosia and Japanese fruit cake.

In the evening the floating Christmas celebration adjourned to the ranch style home of the president-elect.

Carter did not, however, take a complete respite from the homework he must do before assuming the presidency. He has been calling advisers and working out the details of a forthcoming divestiture of his interests in the family's peanut business.

On Monday, Carter will assemble for the first time his entire Cabinet on St. Simons, an island off the south Georgia coast, for a three-day review of policies he intends to initiate.

Party for Jesus, then flames

CHICAGO (UPI) — It was Christmas and a boy named Jesus was celebrating his birthday.

A few hours later, Jesus Garcia, 11, was in the midst of a nightmare.

He was at the Cook County morgue identifying the bodies of his mother, his sister and his friends — victims of a fire that raged through a three-flat apartment building.

Police Lt. John Stibich said the fire started when Reuben Garcia and his 15-year-old son, Sergio, tried to light a barbecue in the hall of their third-floor apartment.

Fire broke the burning coils ignited a can of fire starter in Sergio's hands, and he dropped the can to the floor, Stibich hospitalized Saturday.

Garcia told police he ran outside with the can, dripping fire fluid, while flames roared up the stairwell inside.

Inside a third floor apartment, five adults and seven or eight children at the party were trapped by the flames.

The parents broke windows and began to throw the children to the cement below to avoid the flames shooting up the wooden stairway like smoke up a chimney.

Coincidentally, off-duty policemen were holding a dinner party next door, but they were nearly helpless to convince the trapped occupants to use the fire escape at the side of the building.

"They were Spanish. They didn't understand English," said Richard Janik, whose cousin, a policeman, was at the party. "We tried to motion them to use the fire escape, but they didn't understand."

"One kid fell into the gangway landing into the basement of the building," said Janik's cousin, Robert Lesnak.

Christmas mishap hurts girl

FILER — Sherie Covey, 17, Buhi, is in Magic Valley Memorial Hospital with back injuries sustained in a one-day accident early Christmas morning.

Miss Covey was a passenger in a 1965 Ford Fairlane two-door, driven by Roger W. Devore, 19, Twin Falls, on eastbound on old U.S. highway 20, one and one-half miles north of Filer, left the road on the left side and smashed into a concrete ditch. Devore escaped without injury. The automobile was totally destroyed.

Devore was cited for driving under the influence of alcohol.

Deputy Fire Chief Charles Pierce said one woman landed on her head.

At least seven of the youngsters were unable to escape the apartment. They were found dead, huddled under a cushion on a large couch.

Wilderness law hurts outfitters

By JEFF SHER

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Outfitters and guides need the wilderness, but, paradoxically, the advent of wilderness status for the Idaho Primitive Area may signal the end of the trail for many outfitters.

When the primitive area becomes wilderness, the regulations governing activity within the wilderness will prohibit the use of mechanized equipment and the establishment and maintenance of permanent camps, and will establish a maximum limit on the size of parties entering the wilderness at 30 people and 25 head of stock.

Norman Guth, president of the Idaho Outfitters and Guides Association, says the wilderness regulations may force many outfitters out of business because "there is not enough profit to cover extra expenses" which will result from the new regulations.

The Wilderness Act of 1964 mandated that all forest service primitive areas be reviewed by 1975 and either reclassified as wilderness or declassified and managed under the multiple use concept.

Congress has the responsibility of determining how the primitive area will be reclassified. There is no doubt that Congress will designate much of the primitive area as wilderness, but the question is how much. The primitive area contains 1,224,576 acres.

In Dec. 1975, the Ford administration, acting upon the advice of the Department of Agriculture, recommended to Congress it establish a River of No Return Wilderness totaling 1.1 million acres.

Conservationists have been pushing for a wilderness totaling 2.3 million acres, which would preserve intact almost the entire Salmon River drainage.

A broad coalition of interests, including Gov. Cecil Andrus of Idaho, the Idaho Fish and Game Department and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, has advocated a wilderness of 1.8 million acres as a compromise between conservationists and industry.

Just prior to the presidential elections of Nov. 1976, President Ford came out in favor of adding the Chamberlain Basin to the proposed wilderness, thereby upping his wilderness proposal to about 1.4 million acres.

Congress is expected to initiate action on the fate of the Idaho Primitive Area in their next session beginning in January.

Until Congress acts, however, the Forest Service has responsibility for management of the primitive area.

The Forest Service has prepared a management plan for the primitive area to govern activity within the area until Congress acts. The plan is intended to preserve the wilderness characteristics of the area and accordingly incorporates all the restrictions measures which the outfitters fear.

The provisions of the management plan most objectionable to the outfitters are the restrictions on the use of mechanized equipment, specifically chain saws, and on the establishment or maintenance of permanent facilities, such as storage structures and tent frames, and the limits placed on the size of wilderness parties.

"This kind of management is more antagonistic than reasonable," Guth stated. "We want to use the wilderness, not abuse it."

The chain saw requirement alone will cost each outfitter between $1,000 and $1,500 a year, he added.

Guth maintains the outfitters are not pushing for indiscriminate use of chain saws but would like to have permits issued for one or two days a year.

The alternatives for the outfitters, according to Guth, are to either hire two men for one month or one man for the whole season to supply wood for the outfitters' camps, at a cost estimated by Guth to be about $500 per man per month.

"We don't feel it was the intent of Congress to restrict the use of chain saws where their use has been established. We feel the intent was to prohibit mechanized travel," Guth said. He added that it is inconsistent to allow the use of jeeps and airplanes where their use is established and where the use of chain saws.

Although the outfitters feel that they must have chain saws, they are equally if not more threatened by the regulation eliminating permanent back-country facilities.

Guth said outfitters simply cannot afford to pack all their camp equipment, including stoves, utensils, bedding and tools, in and out every year. He said since outfitters first started operating in the primitive area, the use of a six-foot by six-foot permanent structure has been allowed for caching supplies. Wilderness requirements would prohibit any storage of supplies in the back country during the off-season.

Wilderness regulations would also require outfitters to tear down tent frames every year at the end of the season. Guth claims this regulation would cause more environmental deterioration than letting the frames stand over the winter because if the frames are torn down every year new poles will have to be cut about every two years.

Guth is not concerned at present with the forest service management plan for the primitive area. "I don't foresee any problems (with restrictions) until it (the primitive area) is classified as wilderness," Guth said. He added it was his understanding the management plan would merely be a phase down to wilderness.

At present, Guth said, only the chain saw restriction is being enforced by the Forest Service.

However, Earl Dodds, District Forest Ranger for the Big Creek District of the Payette National Forest and one of the principal architects of the management plan, said he feels the plan will "change the nature of their operation."

"Everything in the plan is subject to change if we receive overwhelming request to do so," Dodds continued. "but I doubt if it (the plan) would change very much."

Speculating on the effect the plan will have on the outfitters, Dodds commented, "I think they will have to sell a wilderness experience in the future rather than just a hunting or fishing trip."

Guth said without outfitters and guides many people will not be able to use the wilderness — resource. Outfitters provide "the only means of transport in and out of the wilderness," Guth asserted.

In addition, Guth claimed, without hunting conducted primarily by outfitters there would be no game management in many areas of the primitive area, including the Chamberlain Basin.

Guth said the restrictions could affect the livelihood of approximately 1,000 Idahoans, the number of people he estimates are employed by outfitters operating in the primitive area.

Andrus trip must be last

Idaho's popular governor who now is joining the Washington bureaucracy as Secretary of the Interior has admitted he wasn't above taking a free fishing trip from one of the state's largest companies.

Cecil Andrus last week admitted he had taken an expense-paid fishing trip offered by Morrison-Knudsen in July of 1975.

Andrus made the disclosure on a Boise television station apparently as part of his closet-cleaning in preparation for confirmation hearings as Secretary of the Interior.

What's worrisome about the Andrus fishing trip on the Morrison-Knudsen tab is that the trip occurred 18 months ago and the governor never bothered to mention it while he was still primarily working as governor of Idaho and not preparing for a new job at the Interior department.

Earlier this summer, the governor chastised three Idaho tax commissioners for taking free trips from Idaho Power. The governor didn't like these travels because he said the tax commissioners had to deal with Idaho Power Company's tax structure.

While criticizing the tax commissioners, Andrus knew he had taken a similar trip himself. He either should have mentioned his own mistake when he discussed the tax commissioners or kept quiet about the tax commissioners because he didn't want to mention his own trip.

Andrus is widely respected as a man of integrity but his inconsistent views of what constitutes an "unnecessary free trip" put a small smudge on his shiny image.

When he becomes Secretary of the Interior, the governor should carefully establish a personal record of good conduct and then ask his vast bureaucracy to do the same.

The head of a major governmental agency is asked to be especially clean in this day and age if he is to be accepted as a leader by the public.

Andrus can measure up to the requirements of Interior secretary. But in doing so, he shouldn't take free any more trips from large, influential companies.

New tax forms still confusing

Early in January, Uncle Sam will begin mailing his annual post-Christmas gift to his nephews and nieces — the 1976 income tax return forms. Tax experts have been warning for weeks that, if anything, "reforms" in the tax law voted by Congress last fall have further complicated what is already a dreaded annual yearly chore for millions of Americans.

It could be a "disaster," asserts the Kiplinger Tax Letter. All the elements are there: New forms ... revised old forms ... forms mailed later than usual ... changes that apply retroactively ... instructions written before regulations under the new law are out.

The IRS expects to be swamped by requests for help, but won't be able to give the same level of assistance as before because Congress did not increase its budget.

A lot of taxpayers are in for a rude shock. Sick pay recipients, for example. They spent their sick pay in 1976 thinking it was tax free — which it was; until Oct. 4, when Congress altered the law retroactively to Jan. 1.

Similar examples of legislated confusion could be multiplied endlessly. Each so-called reform in the tax law has done nothing but pile new minutiae atop old minutiae, further complexity atop existing complexity, and provide continuing employment for armies of tax consultants, tax preparers, tax interpreters, tax reporters, tax lawyers and tax court judges.

Maybe when things get bad enough, maybe when we really have a disaster, we will begin thinking about true tax reform — reform that would wipe all the deductions, exemptions, exclusions, limitations, etc., etc., off the books and establish simple flat rates for all categories of taxpayer.

Impossible? The system we have now is not very far from that situation.

1976 full of zany events

NEW YORK — (NEA) — America's Bicentennial turned out to be a vintage year for off-beat news.

There was, for example, the chain-reaction accident in Atlanta that began when a woman, seeing a snake in her kitchen, screamed.

Her husband, taking a shower, ran in dripping, stepped on their dog, who howled. The snake slithered under a cabinet, the husband knelt down to look for it; the dog touched the

A berserk bunny bugged service on London's central subway when he jumped into a cab and bit, clawed and scratched the driver. It happened on an elevated suburban stretch of track and tied up six trains.

Calcutta police had to kill a 14-foot python which was swallowing an owl (always a slow business) on an airport runway and delaying an Air India plane waiting to land.

A young man in Taipei, Taiwan, wrote 700 letters to his girl during the past two years, proposing marriage. His persistence brought results. A Taipei newspaper reported that the woman became engaged to the postman who faithfully delivered all the letters.

Another surprise ending hit John Gunset of Omaha, Neb., who was stranded on Interstate 71 near Crawfordsville, Inc., after his car stalled. He broadcast a citizen's band radio call for help. A driver stopped on the other side of the highway, walked across, pulled a knife and robbed Gunset of $54.

Bedford, England, contributed the story of Judge Robert Lymbery, who also suffered a surprise. The judge overruled a lower court's order that a 168-pound Great Dane be destroyed. Then he gave the dog a friendly pat. The big beast promptly bit the judge's hand.

Customs officials in Munich, West Germany, nabbed five students brewing English beer in a university bathtub. They charged them with violating a medieval law guarding the purity of German beer.

The Seattle Fire Department computer, in its yearly report, said department personnel had delivered six babies, five to women and one to a man. "Either the computer goofed or one delivery made medical history," the department newsletter said.

The Philadelphia Flyers hockey team had Kate Smith; when she sang "God Bless America" the team always won. The Boston Red Sox had a witch to cast spells on other teams. Both "assistants" had successful but brief runs. In Tanzania, the National Soccer Assn. hired a witch doctor to accompany the team on out-of-town games. When the government, which takes such things seriously, found out, it fired the whole committee.

And finally, the usually sober-sided Soviet Union contributed its share of zany news to 1976. One Russian citizen copped what must surely be the all-time nepotism championship, putting Truly hairy troubles were encountered by Mrs. Lidia Pavlova of Omsk, who now wears a wig. On a visit to faroff Alma Ata, near the Chinese border, she dropped into the "beauty" parlor at the railway station to have her waves restored after her long train trip. The Kazakh edition of Pravda reported that when she woke the next day she had neither curls nor half her hair. When she stepped into the street, the rest of her hair blew away with the breeze. The head cosmetician told her it wasn't unusual. It was a matter of chance whether her "special chemical treatment" produced a head of beautiful curls or a bald one. "Don't worry," he added, "it will grow back again in six months."

husband with its cold nose; the husband, thinking it was the snake, passed out cold. The wife phoned an ambulance, the husband said he was okay; the ambulance men insisted he might have had a heart attack and put him on a stretcher; as they lifted it, the snake came out again, one ambulance man dropped the stretcher, the husband fell out and broke his leg.

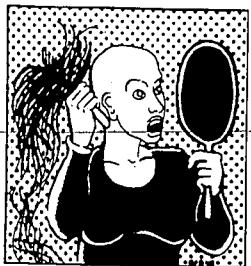

Making like Robin Hood, a Staten Island, N.Y., housewife repulsed an intruder with her husband's trusty bow and arrow. Husband John, a huntsman, was away when Mrs. Grace Lisk heard a prowler in the cellar. She grabbed one of John's bows, fitted an arrow, and let fly. The steel-tipped shaft hit the man in the shoulder. He yelled "Ouch," and fled. Mrs. Lisk ran to a neighbor who told police: "She was real excited."

A bumbling bank robber was nabbed when he fled from a bowery bank in N.Y. City and tried to stash his loot in a trash can behind a building. It turned out to be police headquarters and one of the men spotted and grabbed the robber ... and the loot.

Living junkyard. That's what surgeons called the junk they operated on at New York's Metropolitan Hospital. They suspected an abdominal tumor. What they found was over 500 metal objects, including 300 quarters, pennies, and subway tokens, can openers, parts of knives, forks, spoons, nuts, bolts, a chain and keys, and a broken thermometer. The doctors reported the 38-year-old woman vacuum cleaner suffered no internal damage.

more relatives on the payroll of the Ukraine Agricultural Academy than most folks have. Dean V. Yurchishin, investigation showed, hired no fewer than 160 of his relatives on his teaching staff. He was also accused of "borrowing" works from other scientists for his doctorate thesis and permitting widespread cheating. The Communist party paper Pravda reported his punishment: he was expelled from the party.

Post-election wisdom

John F. Kennedy once said that failure is an orphan, but success has a thousand fathers. We can't recall any presidential election which elicited more expressions of paternal pride than the one just past.

For instance, the National Education Association tells us that the victory of Jimmy Carter is proof that "teacher power" is now a political factor to be reckoned with. The organization had endorsed the Carter-Mondale ticket, the first such endorsement in its history.

On the other hand, any number of commentators have pointed out, with quite compelling statistics — that Carter carried the South, and hence the nation, by virtue of the overwhelming percentage of blacks who voted for him. The Southern white vote was much, much closer.

The National Right to Work Committee says it's clear that the vote in the right-to-work states is what put Carter over the top — and they expect something for that, Jimmy.

Meanwhile, organized labor is congratulating itself that its efforts helped put its choice in the White House — and they are not unexpectant, either.

Even a homosexual magazine called "Blueboy" is claiming that the gay vote was an important factor in electing Mr. Carter. We haven't reached 1000 yet, but we're counting.

Some college kids think with their hands

By RAY CROMLEY

WASHINGTON — (NEA) — According to Labor Department studies, there will be 13-million college graduates in the decade which ends in 1985. There will be job openings for 12 million.

While a range of professional openings will increase markedly — for mathematicians 45 per cent, engineers and geologists 35 per cent, social workers 43 per cent, lawyers 42 per cent and health administrators 37 per cent — overall, the supply of college-trained men and women will, it is predicted, be well above the demand.

By contrast, there will be hefty increases in the demand for a range of mechanics, air conditioning and heating mechanics, data-processing machine and office machine repairmen, rosters, bulldozer operators, billing clerks, photographic process workers, welders and on and on and on. In the decade ahead many of these jobs will require increased amounts of technical training.

There is a considerable body of opinion therefore which now holds that there must be a hefty step-up in what's been called vocational training on a college level.

The problem, of course, is that vocational training has a bad name. Families of superior students, in more cases than not, insist on the standard academic route. A friend who works in the field finds that first-rate colleges he deals with are extremely reluctant to set up courses of study to prepare students for what they consider blue-collar occupations.

The belief therefore among those I've talked to in Congress and those who deal in estimates of what types of training will be needed for job openings in the next decade is that we are going to run into serious social problems. We'll have large numbers of academically trained young men and women who will be emotionally unhappy, feeling themselves unfairly treated because they cannot secure work in the fields they have studied.

Some will be rebellious. There are reports of this today — but on a small scale as compared with what the forecasters see in 1985 to 1995.

A number of developing nations have faced this problem for years. PhDs have become a drug on the market. Yet there are serious scarcities in the manufacturing and service skills these societies must have to progress at a reasonable rate.

The problem is not primarily one of income. In the United States a good many jobs which require no college now pay as well or almost as well as a good many jobs for which degrees are required. Some pay more.

The problem, as one of my friends on Capitol Hill sees it, is one of prestige. We somehow must find a way to convince parents, students and college professors that jobs we've traditionally considered as blue collar are deserving of as much respect and, if well done, contributing as much to society as the ports which require academic degrees.

We only need to look through our history and think of those great men — in almost every field, including science — who had no degrees. And of the major contributions to our development made by the "blue collar" occupations.

We have been slow to recognize that some men — including some geniuses — think better with their hands than with calculators and equations. But they come up with important results. We are discovering that there are people of superior ability who arrive at their answers through non-bookish techniques.

A small but growing number of men and women in Washington studying education as it is today — and as it might be — believe that colleges therefore must provide for a wider range of student types, not limit themselves to youngsters facile with words, or expert at math.

Yule, Communism: tolerated mixture

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — Atheistic communism winks long and hard at Christmas in Yugoslavia, tolerating the celebration of the holiday in this largely Christian country.

But not officially. The official holiday is New Year's when even President Tito, a man who loves his food and drink, publicly takes part in the merriment to the delight of his countrymen.

It is a season of irony in a Communist country where so many do so much behind the backs of so few in order to get around the realities of an impersonal and sometimes hostile system. The ruling few are not fooled, but then communism in Yugoslavia is not the harsh repressive tool of its Soviet bloc neighbors.

Glistening decorations in shop windows that in the West are synonymous only with Christmas are accompanied by gay signs exclaiming wishes only for a happy New Year. "Christmas" cards in traditional greens, reds and whites with Santas and reindeer make no mention of Christmas in writing.

Christmas comes twice in Yugoslavia — Dec. 25 for the Roman Catholics in Croatia and Slovenia and Jan. 7 for the majority Orthodox in Serbia and elsewhere. Between them is the official holiday.

This holiday season comes after a generally rewarding year for the Yugoslavs, both politically and economically. Tito, nearing 85, appears healthy after two illnesses, one of which kept him confined for two months in the early fall.

By restricting imports, one of the reasons for shortages in Yugoslavia, this country of 22 million has managed not to wipe out a $1.5 billion deficit in one year but to show a small surplus.

Its currency, the dinar, is the only one from a Communist country that is convertible in the West. The Italians, Austrians and Greeks exchange it willingly on their borders though they will not accept denominations larger than the 100 dinar note.

Yugoslav relations with the United States have improved following heated disputes that led to the cold shouldering of Ambassador Laurence H. Silberman, a Republican appointee who resigned after the election of Democrat Jimmy Carter. He will leave Christmas Day. The Yugoslavs make no effort to mask their pleasure at his departure.

The Yugoslav ship-of-state appears on course between East and West, a tightrope strung between the superpowers whose main support is Belgrade's leadership role in the nonaligned Third World.

But the Yugoslav people look

West with the envy that is generated by growing prosperity. It is underscored when they skip off to Italy increasing numbers to buy the same things they can get in their own country, but the prestige value lies in showing their friends the "Made in Italy" label.

That the Yugoslavs have less from which to choose and less with which to buy what is available than their neighbors to the West seems of little concern to them. They look backwards at their own past and know they never had it so good.

And they look over their shoulders east to the Soviet bloc and find that by comparison Yugoslavia is a paradise.

Never during the year does this dingy, smoke-polluted but bustling capital on the Danube River take on more of a Western flavor than during the Christmas season. Not only the shop windows but the shelves inside the shops are full.

Sparkling Christmas decorations — colored balls, gold and silver foil stars, green garlands — are imported from Italy and are displayed in nearly every shop and are for sale in most of them.

Vendors standing nearly shoulder to shoulder on the sidewalks in front of the bigger shops sell Christmas cards neatly displayed in rows on wooden folding tables. They don't hawk their wares because that's not their style.

Best selling toys are the tiny, detailed metal replicas of European sports cars and Formula 1 racing cars — all imported from the west at a cost in hard currency to Yugoslavia.

Tito's toy is a black six-door Mercedes 600, and he may be using it again New Year's Eve. He was in Zagreb for the dawn of 1976 last Dec. 31 and, those close to him said, he gave a short speech in which he urged more merriment by exclaiming, "There's not enough to drink."

Characteristically, despite his age, he stayed up until 6 a.m. — it only added to his charisma and the Yugoslavs loved it.

Special Christmas present

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (UPI) — Christmas was a special day for Bob and Patricia Albert, Walla Walla.

Mrs. Albert was home for the first time in over two and a half months of touch-and-go recovery from an automobile accident.

Patricia was the sole survivor in an automobile accident that killed four of her children and a dog.

But before she could return home for the holiday, Mrs. Albert had to overcome broken bones, a punctured lung, a long bout with pneumonia and 23 days in the intensive-care ward as well as two months with her leg in traction.

She's still in a body cast, but Thursday her doctor wrapped her cast up in Christmas garb and sent her home for Christmas.

"This was my present," said her delighted husband.

Right turn rule spreads

© Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Motorists in three states will ring in the new year with new laws allowing right turns at red lights after stopping. A fourth state will follow suit this summer.

On Jan. 1, Virginia and New York will join the growing number of states where such turns are legal at all intersections with traffic lights unless signs are posted prohibiting the maneuver.

(New York's law will not apply to New York City.)

Similar laws will take effect in New Jersey on January 1, and in Pennsylvania on July 1.

The trend toward right turns on red has accelerated since last year, when Congress asked all states to adopt the so-called "permissive" turn rule — allowing the turn where not barred by a sign, as opposed to permitting the turn only where a sign says it's allowed. Since then, more than a dozen states have changed their traffic regulations to permit the turn.

The Federal Highway Administration (FHWA), which is pushing the nationwide drive, says the turn will cut fuel consumption and air pollution by reducing the time drivers spend waiting for lights to change. It recommends a uniform national policy with all states following the permissive or "Western" rule, pioneered by California in 1947.

But what goes well in the West is being resisted mainly in the East.

Massachusetts and the District of Columbia ban the turn altogether. Six states — Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, South Carolina, Vermont and Wyoming — permit the turn only at intersections where signs specify that it is allowed.

Some states with this non-permissive rule fear a change will lead to more pedestrian deaths and injuries, especially on congested urban streets. Officials in these states cite that under their rules if a sign allowing turns is inadvertently missing the only result is a delay for motorists. But under the Western rule if a sign barring turns is missing the intersection can become extremely hazardous.

Vietnam Reds alter joy aim

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — There were no Christmas carols on Vietnamese radio stations Christmas Eve, but the official Vietnam News Agency told of the joy of Christians who "build socialism in their country."

Refugees recently arrived in Thailand said Christmas would be permitted to attend church services in Vietnam, but the word was spread quietly rather than openly broadcast as in 1975, the first year of Communist rule in southern Vietnam.

The radio stations in Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon, broadcast recordings of revolutionary songs and news reports of congratulations from Communist parties throughout the world celebrating the birth of the Communist Party of Vietnam.

The news agency, monitored in Bangkok, described a visit by its correspondent to Hal Hau, a predominantly Catholic coastal district south of Hanoi.

"We consider it which Catholics those who help create happiness for others living around them, and build socialism in their country," the VNA account said.

Over the past 10 years, the district has conferred "good Catholic Family" certificates on 2,200 families — good at production, good at uniting and organizing the people, good at implementing the state's policies."

The Vietnam Workers party officially renamed itself the Vietnam Communist Party in Hanoi this week as 1,008 delegates from throughout the country gathered to elect new leaders and hold the fourth party congress in 30 years.

Pardons due 71 serving drug terms

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — Seventy-one persons convicted of drug crimes because of testimony from a discredited former narcotics agent in Vermont will be pardoned by Gov. Thomas Salmon before he leaves office Jan. 6, according to a spokesman for the governor.

The pardon recommendations were made Thursday in a report to Salmon from a special three-member commission he named in March to review all convictions involving former agent Paul Lawrence.

"Many lives were tragically affected by the activities of Paul Lawrence, and those who were wronged by Lawrence cannot be made whole again, especially for the time served in jail or prison," the committee said.

The panel recommended fines paid by persons who will be pardoned should be returned to them, and that their criminal records should be destroyed.

Wyoming aides for Andrus

CHEYENNE (UPI) — Wyoming's U.S. senators and Gov. Ed Herschler have given their bipartisan support to Interior Secretary-designate Cecil Andrus, but are more reserved in their opinions of Agriculture Secretary-designate Bob Bergland.

Herschler Thursday praised Andrus, presently governor of Idaho, as a strong environmentalist and sharp businessman.

Since Wyoming and Idaho both have large sections of federal lands within their borders, Herschler expects Andrus to be sympathetic to Wyoming's problems with federal agencies.

"By virtue of his experience, he will know the difficult times that farmers and ranchers face," Sen. Cliff Hansen, R-Wyo., agreed.

Control over Wyoming's water, timber, tourism, and use of predator controls are issues Andrus must solve in cooperation with the state, Hansen said.

Sen.-elect Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., said the appointment of Andrus by President-elect Jimmy Carter was "very acceptable."

"It's certainly better than a number of names I heard mentioned and probably somebody who is acceptable to the West," Wallop said.

Bergland, Carter's pick for agriculture secretary, was criticized by Hansen for proposing plans that have failed in the past.

Hansen said Bergland's statement that government policy should raise farm price supports to stabilize farm and food prices has been tried with no success in the past.

Excessive governmental controls on farming have harmed prices, he said.

Wallop also said he was reluctant to start price supports.

Herschler said the controls were "fine for certain areas," but sugar beet farmers probably would rather have import tariffs.

The GOP senators also were skeptical of Bergland's proposal to establish a farmer-controlled national grain reserve.

"I don't think that any bureaucracy will allow something to exist as farmer-controlled," Wallop said.

"I like the idea, but I don't think that will take place," Herschler said some reserves are necessary and praised the proposal.

Soviets may be happy about missing 'secrets'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Soviets could be kicking — or congratulating — themselves today because they didn't get that alleged offer from a former CIA agent, to sell them intelligence secrets for $250,000.

The offer was the offer allegedly was made by former CIA operative Edwin Gibbons Moore II, 56, who was said to have tossed over a Soviet Embassy apartment wall an envelope containing secret material plus his request for money and how to deliver it.

A Russian embassy watchman thought the plastic-enclosed manila envelope might be a bomb and alerted the U.S. Executive Protective Service agent outside who called bomb disposal squads. Eventually, it ended up with the FBI counterintelligence branch.

Moore, who retired with a physical disability pension from the CIA in 1973, was arrested near his Maryland home Wednesday while picking up a FBI-planted bogus payment of the first "installment."

He is being held on bond of $150,000 on federal charges of espionage, the first present or former CIA agent believed to have been so charged in the United States.

The Washington Star, which interviewed neighbors, described Moore as "odd or eccentric, and a fervent anti-communist."

If the envelope had gone, as addressed, to the Soviet "resident" or chief intelligence officer, federal officials said, he would have found:

A plastic-covered manila envelope containing an unsigned note, written in English and addressed "For Resident Eyes Only," and secret or classified information.

This included among other material, federal officials said, information on "the internal structure of the CIA," names and addresses of CIA employees including those who allegedly might prove cooperative with the Russians, and the addresses of CIA "safe houses" in the Washington area where Soviet and communist defectors are interrogated.

What would the Russians have done? It was speculated that they would have first checked out the alleged sender, Moore, and pondered:

— Moore had been out of active intelligence for four years.

— He was not very clever in tossing his offer over a wall outside a northwest

Washington apartment known to be under the surveillance of the Executive Protection Service — and probably the FBI — when so many other means were available. He could have arranged to meet a Soviet Embassy official or contact and at 7:30 a.m. discussed or passed on the material.

Idaho worker wages up, purchasing power down

The rise in taxes over the past 20 years has been dramatic. According to State Employment Department analyst Steve Seward, state, federal and social security taxes took eight percent out of the average Idahoan's paycheck in 1956.

By 1974 that per cent cut for taxes was up to 15 per cent. Federal tax cuts for the past two years have brought the percentage of the average paycheck that goes to taxes down to 13.9 per cent.

Other figures compiled by Seward show the trend in the purchasing power of the Idaho wage-earner.

In 1970, the average Idaho worker with three dependents made $194 per week. Federal, state and social security taxes knocked that down to $167 weekly take-home pay.

The consumer price index, based on a rate of 100 in 1967, stands at an average 108.6 for the first 10 months of this year. That means it takes $109.60 this year to buy what $100 could buy in 1967.

In terms of 1967 dollars, the $167 weekly take-home pay amounts to only $138.4 a week. That pay — take-home wage adjusted for inflation — is called "spendable earnings."

In 1966 spendable earnings for the Idaho worker with three dependents stood at $99.28, slightly higher than the average for this year.

The average weekly working spendable for this worker stood at $109.41 per week in 1968. Social security, state and federal taxes chipped this down 11.8 per cent, leaving $96.50 weekly take-home pay.

But, in 1969 the dollar was worth more than in 1967. So, in terms of 1967 dollars, the 1969 average weekly take-home pay of $96.50 was actually worth $99.28.

The average worker's spendable earnings this year at $86.49 are almost one per cent less than his spendable earnings of $99.28 in 1966.

However, spendable earnings this year have been on the rise and now stand 1.1 per cent higher than the 1966 level.

In October, the last month for which figures are available, the Idaho worker's weekly paycheck averaged $100.39 after adjusting for inflation and taxes.

Besides this year, 1971 was the only year spendable earnings rose in Idaho during the past decade.

In 1971, spendable earnings shot up from about $96 to $102.65 a week for the Idaho worker.

But after 1971, the purchasing power of the Idaho worker's weekly paycheck dropped steadily, bottoming out at $97.14 in 1975.

Between 1966 and 1971, average spendable earnings in Idaho dropped slowly but constantly from $99.28 to $96 per week.

According to Seward, the drop in the average worker's purchasing power between 1971 and 1975 was the "most significant decline" during the 20 years the State Department of Employment has charted spendable earnings in Idaho.

"I think it (the decline) was just an indication of how severe this recession was, even in Idaho, which was ... less affected than all but three or four states," Seward says.

"Inflation is slowing now. The tax burden has leveled off. Conditions are better than have been. But we still have a long way to go to get to where we were five years ago," he says.

"I expect that those trend lines will improve but it will have to be with an improvement of economic policy," says Mike Glenn, chairman of the business department at the College of Southern Idaho.

Much of that worry will have to be directed towards putting more people to work, Glenn maintains. He says the country can't have a strong recovery with 8 per cent unemployment.

Also, he says, worker productivity will have to increase. He says the nation's economy is producing at only 75 per cent capacity now, compared with up to 90 per cent capacity production at times in the past.

Studies, he says, have shown that in Idaho productivity is comparatively high. However, unemployment remains a problem, he says.

Glenn says he would not be surprised if the spendable earnings of middle income and lower-income wage earners had not actually fallen during the past 10 years.

He says the main "culprits" for this are inflation and taxes. With inflation recently having been as high as 12 per cent yearly, he said, it's "easy to understand" that real take-home pay has stayed about the same.

Increasing real wages is "going to have to be a function of our economic growth — employment and output," he says.

Dr. Ellis Lamborn, professor of Economics at Boise State University, also says it's "no surprise" that spendable earnings have not risen over the past 10 years. He says, however, he has read studies showing that, on the national level, some professionals, particularly doctors and lawyers, are ahead.

But, for most people, he

I.F. woman victim of murder

IDAHO FALLS (UPI) — An Idaho Falls woman was killed with an ax Friday and a 57-year-old Idaho Falls man was charged with first-degree murder in her death.

Police arrested Otto Miller on the murder charge after the decapitated body of Olga Thiele, 62, was found in her home Friday morning. Mrs. Thiele's son, Craig, went to a neighbor and called his father and then grabbed a golf club and ran out into the street.

Craig Thiele said a man had "lipped out" and chased him around the house with an ax, hitting him once in the leg. He said the man then ran into the house before police arrived at the scene.

Roads largely clear

Andrus' fish trip features news week

By United Press International

Transition to a new governorship and Gov. Cecil D. Andrus' decision that he went on a free fishing trip to Alaska topped the Idaho headlines this past week.

Andrus returned to Boise from Ketchikan, Ga., last Saturday night to a triumphal welcome as Jimmy Carter's choice for secretary of the Interior and state officials began planning for his eventual departure to Washington, D.C.

U. S. Gov. John V. Evans began meeting with department heads for a briefing on the Andrus resignation to take the Interior post in the Carter administration next month.

He asked Attorney General William French Smith, too, for a formal opinion on the procedure to follow in appointing a successor as lieutenant governor and appointed an advisory committee to search for and screen candidates. He said he will consult with Andrus on the appointment but said the final choice will be his.

Meanwhile, Andrus picked two transition teams — one for the governorship and one for the cabinet post — and began picking the staff he will take back to the state's capital with him.

He also disclosed in a live television interview that he went fishing in Alaska in July of 1975 as a guest of Morrison-Knudsen Co., Inc. He said he could see nothing wrong with accepting the junket but acknowledged it may come up in his confirmation hearings before the Senate next month.

M-K is a major contractor on the trans-Alaskan pipeline and the Interior Department which Andrus will head is charged with inspecting the work on it.

Andrus also drew stern criticism from The Idaho Statesman which said editorially he should not have accepted such a favor from a company involved in lobbying the state legislature. By week's end Andrus' trip drew national headlines.

Elsewhere on the Idaho news scene this past week:

— Olga Thiele, 62, Idaho Falls, was found murdered in her home Friday, the victim of an ax slaying. Police arrested Otto Miller, 57, Idaho Falls, on a first-degree murder charge.

— A man robbed the First Security Bank's main office in downtown Boise of $6,100 Thursday afternoon and then fled into a crowd of Christmas shoppers.

Usery sees serene year

© Chicago Daily News

WASHINGTON — Labor Secretary W. J. Usery foresees a serene New Year in collective bargaining, with settlements adding 9 to 10 percent a year to labor costs.

The average wage-benefit package in 1977, he said in an interview, should be about the same as this year's settlements, which ranged from 7 to 9 percent.

"It should be a very, good peaceful year in collective bargaining," Usery said as he prepared to leave his Cabinet post. A total of 7.5 million workers will be affected by 1977 contract negotiations.

Only the coal mining industry, where contracts expire Dec. 1, may have serious strike trouble in 1977, he predicted.

Usery praised President-elect Jimmy Carter's declaration that he wouldn't seek authority to control wages and prices from the new Congress.

"If he had not cleared up doubts about wage-price controls, unions would have been hedging their bets in negotiations," he said. "It's good for the economy and the country that he made his policy statement."

Usery, who was chief of the Federal Mediation Service before he became secretary of labor, gave this capsule outlook for major industry bargaining:

—Oil-chemical. "There may be some skirmishes there but we don't see any major strike."

—Steel—Under—the Experimental Negotiating Agreement, a national strike is barred and issues unresolved by April 7 will be submitted to binding arbitration. Usery thinks there will be a voluntary settlement before the deadline.

—Construction. Most of the 2,700 contracts expire in spring and early summer. "I see moderation there," says Usery, forecasting a pattern of 7-per cent package increases.

—Telephones. Job security will be a major issue but the outlook is for a peaceful settlement after a skirmish or two in the industry, where bargaining is conducted regionally.

—Aerospace. No major strike in the picture because of high unemployment and the majority of the major unions, machinists and auto workers.

—Longshore. "Better report than ever" in an industry always plagued by labor-management problems. Containerization is a sticky issue but a peaceful solution is likely.

Coal. International problems in the union — a three-way fight for leadership — will hamper and perhaps torpedo the search for accord.

Extremists claim responsibility

PARIS (UPI) — A Greek leftwing extremist group Friday claimed responsibility for the assassination of Athens CIA chief Richard Welch, killed outside his home Dec. 23, 1975.

In a long explanation published by the French left-wing newspaper, liberation, the Greek organization gave a detailed account of the killing done to "avenge the immense crimes of the CIA against the Greek people."

According to the account, the group, The Revolutionary Organization of November 17, named for a 1973 left-wing student uprising against former military government in Greece, put Welch under close surveillance after he arrived in Athens, June 15, 1975.

The assassination was conducted by three persons "cleanly and efficiently" so as to kill only Welch, the article said.

Ineffective devices scored

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Disabled Americans who must use wheelchairs or other medical devices are stuck often with expensive but inadequate or ineffective products, a public interest group said Friday.

"Many members of the medical equipment industry continue to deny their customers minimal expectations of reliability," said the Disability Rights Center in a statement. "Quick warranty repair, reasonably priced merchandise, or products customized to the needs of the user are legitimate consumer demands."

"By disguising themselves as extensions of the medical profession," the group said, "medical equipment dealers have eluded these requirements of responsive marketing."

The center, funded by Ralph Nader's "Public Citizen" Inc. and by the Levinson Foundation, released a report on consumer experiences in three areas — wheelchairs, home respiratory equipment and artificial breasts for women who have undergone surgery. One survey of wheelchair users, it said, showed 31 per cent of those asked were not satisfied with the product, with complaints that included "faulty brakes, shoddy and sometimes flammable upholstery — and — unreliable wheels and tires."

Citibank retains 6¼% lending rate

NEW YORK (UPI) — Trendsetting Citibank of New York, the nation's second largest bank, Friday decided to leave its prime lending rate at 6¼ per cent although a number of major banks recently have lowered their rate to 6 per cent.

Citibank officials said their formula, based on commercial paper rates, did not call for a cut at this time. The nation's major banks are operating on a two-tier basis.

Chase Manhattan, the third largest bank, Wednesday trimmed its rate to 6 per cent. Within the past two weeks, First National Bank of Chicago and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, moved to a 6 per cent rate. A few smaller banks did, too.

Lagging loan demand has been one reason for a decline in the prime rate this year. Late Thursday, the Federal Reserve Board reported commercial and industrial loans at major New York City banks eased $249 million in the week through Wednesday. A week earlier, there was a rise of $482 million, a revised figure, and a year ago a gain of $78 million.

Key interest rates were mixed. Federal funds, uncommitted reserves lent among banks, averaged 4.63 per cent, down from 4.68 per cent the previous week, while the three-month Treasury bill rate averaged 4.27 per cent, down from 4.37 per cent.

CB radio hazard warnings issued

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If you are careless, a citizens band radio antenna can electrocute you, the Consumer Product Safety Commission warns.

The commission said it had received reports of 32 deaths and 156 injuries from antenna accidents in the past year. It issued the warning Thursday because it expects many people will receive CB radios for Christmas.

The agency said most accidents involved contact between the antennas and power lines during installation or removal from mountings alongside private homes on masts or towers.

"Avoid putting up antennas anywhere in the vicinity of power lines. If this cannot be avoided, contact the power company in advance for further instructions," the agency said.

The agency suggested attaching ropes to antennas during installation or removal, to hold the antennas steady.

In other actions the commission announced Thursday:

— It determined that former commission Chairman Richard Simpson did not violate the law by forming a consulting firm working for two standards organizations. A majority of the commissioners said Simpson's customers do not qualify as manufacturers, for whom he would have been prohibited from working, and that the Justice Department fully agrees with the decision.

— It turned down a petition for safety standards covering support wires for pierced earrings. The agency had been asked to require that the wires be made in such a way that they spring loose when an earring is accidentally pulled off, but said it does not believe there is a problem.

— It turned down a petition for safety standards for five-gallon glass water bottles of the type used in office water coolers. The commission said it appeared the problem of breakage and potential injury was lessening because of the increased use of plastic bottles in water coolers.

Ordinary people made news in 1976

By United Press International
Sure, 1976 was a big year for news makers like Jimmy Carter, Jackie Onassis and Henry Kissinger.
But what about Otis Toadvine, Linda Brigett and Greg Reinert?

You don't remember them? Well, Toadvine Brigett and Reinert aren't likely to forget 1976 — because it was the year they got involved in some wacky events.

Toadvine's start with Otis Toadvine, an 18-year old freshman at Clermont College in Batavia, Ohio.

April 22 was Toadvine's big day. He decided to try to crack the world's hardboiled egg eating record: 44 eggs in 30 minutes.

A crowd of 300 students and townspeople gathered in the school cafeteria to watch Toadvine, who had been "training" a week for the occasion.

"I ate a whole lot all week to stretch my stomach and then I quit eating yesterday," Toadvine explained.

Then he started gulping eggs, trying to get his name in the Guinness Book of World Records.

"I was really confident starting out," said Otis. "I put away 10 eggs in the first five minutes."

"But then," he grimaced, "I hit a rotten egg around No. 14 or 15. It made me a little sick and I couldn't get them down too fast after that."

Alas, Toadvine could stomach no more than 28 eggs. "I feel kind of stuffed, but there's no pain in my stomach," the 6-foot, 175-pound Toadvine reported after the ordeal. "But I am a little high-headed."

Feb. 5 was Linda Brigett's big day. She got married in the nude.

Since Linda is a nightclub singer, she figured it was appropriate attire for the Newport, Ky. wedding.

Her groom took his vows in the altogether too. And not to ruin the party, the bridesmaid, Bigger girl best man also paraded in the buff in front of a huge, fully-clothed audience.

"I was a little embarrassed at first," gushed the blushing bride, "but it was beautiful. I recommend it for other couples."

After the ceremony, the nude bride and groom chatted for several minutes with guests and reporters covering the uncovering. But they also had to share the attention with bridesmaid Morganna Roberts, who wore only her 45-23-39 statistics.

A few weeks after that strange wedding came an unusual beauty pageant in Cincinnati.

The 17 contestants parading in front of a jam-packed crowd seemed unusually tense.

Asked to say something to the audience, one contestant admitted, "I'm nervous as hell."

The contestants were all men participating in a "role reversal" experiment. Greg Reinert took it seriously and went all out to win.

He marched out in the swimsuit competition clad in a floor-length robe. The mostly female audience shrieked when he tossed it off to reveal a tiny swimsuit made entirely of flowers.

But Reinert really convinced the judges he was their man in the talent competition.

While other contestants were content to sing to their pet guinea pig or make animal sounds, Reinert swallowed a goldfish.

Now that's talent you won't see in Atlantic City.

Burley zones drafted

BURLEY — A new fire zone map has been drafted for Burley.

The Burley City Council this week instructed the city attorney to draw up an ordinance to establish the new fire zones as set out in the map.

It also referred the map to the city's planning and zoning commission at the request of Councilman James Henderson, also a member of the planning and zoning group.

Mayer — Chuck Shaduck commented that city officials have been unable to determine when the council last approved a fire zone map. In fact, he said, it was "many years ago." If one ever was officially approved, since no record has been found in the council minutes.

The city has run into a problem with building code provisions because the existing fire zone map does not reflect the actual land uses in many cases. A case in point was the residential zoning where the McCulloch Funeral Home was developed earlier this year on East Main Street.

There was some discussion on whether or not the map need be adopted as an ordinance.

Garbage hours changed

BURLEY — Burley residents now have until 8 a.m. to set out garbage containers for curbside collection.

City officials this week changed instructions to shift the curbside placement time on 96-gallon containers back an hour from the previous 7 a.m.

The action was taken after Councilman James Henderson relayed his wife's objections to the early hour. He added he had heard several comments about the time.

City Clerk E. E. "Bud" Bringer said trash collection crews now begin their rounds at 8 a.m., but would start at 7 a.m. in the summer and that was the reason for setting the year-round time of 7 a.m. Councilman Garth Payne suggested the time be set seasonally.

The 96-gallon containers are part of the new rapid-rail garbage collection system instituted this month by the city in taking over the service after the areas where there are no alleys. The city is using 300-gallon containers serving two or four families where there are alleys for pickup service.

Cassia mayors to gather

BURLEY — Burley officials hope to draw mayors of all Cassia County's outlying cities to a meeting with county commissioners at 10 a.m. Monday.

Mayor Chuck Shaduck told the council Monday night that the city must resell its year-old proposal for a countywide mill levy for recreational purposes.

He said mayors of other cities in the county are being urged to attend Monday's meeting to help convince commissioners of the need for a recreation levy.

Mayors a year ago expressed support for such a levy, with funds to be divided among the local communities for developing recreational facilities and programs. Commissioners cut the proposal from the budget after a large group of rural residents protested the item during budget hearings.

"They're... commissioners are still looking pretty strong at these 40 people that shut us down last year," Shaduck warned Monday, urging the councilmen to attend the commissioner meeting.

He said participants in the city's recreation programs, such as basketball, softball, can be called on next month to reinforce the city's position that it furnishes valuable recreational opportunities for non-residents of the city.

Minico graduates may attend ceremony

RUPERT — All Minico High School graduates will be able to participate in spring graduation exercises each year.

The Minidoka County School Board has rejected a key part of early graduation recommendations by new Minico Principal Chuck Meyer.

Trustees indicated a consensus that all graduates, early or otherwise, should be able to go through the graduation line with their class.

The board took no action, leaving the recommended district policy to be reworded in line with that thinking.

Meyer had recommended early graduates not be allowed to participate in the spring ceremonies. He contended the early graduate's status as a college student or person employed fulltime differed greatly from those who remained in school for the final semester and that difference broke the previous class ties.

Rupert Council approves well reimbursement figure

RUPERT — The Rupert City Council approved a $9,697.65 figure Tuesday night as reimbursement for expenses incurred in connection with two wells on the recreation-sewer lagoon site north of the city.

The wells are located near the site of the planned lagoon cells and on accompanying land on which the city plans to develop a recreation area.

One is a water-producing well; the other a return well.

The nearly $10,000 will go to A&B Irrigation District, which paid the original well costs as part of the package price when it took over operation of the irrigation development on the Northside Project from the Bureau of Reclamation.

The figure for reimbursement, required under the lease-purchase agreement with the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), had been a point of dispute on the part of A&B.

The Bureau of Reclamation recently settled that dispute after turning up some additional costs that had not been included in the price originally proposed by the bureau. A&B directors, although not happy at the new figure, accepted it as the best that the district could obtain.

Questions were raised at the City Council meeting Tuesday night.

Councilman Clark Cameron said the city has no use for the return well and asked,

"Why buy a well we have no use for?"

Public Works Supt. Elmer Schenk was also critical. He said there is no record of how much the return well cost and added that he and the mayor had checked under the well covers and the wells "bear no resemblance (to descriptions) as far as casing goes."

The city is interested in using the production well for delivery of water to the contractor on construction of the lagoon.

Schenk reported that the water is 141 feet from the surface and, according to tests, produced 1,250 gallons per minute while lowering the water level in the well 2 1/2 feet.

Canal meet set

TWIN FALLS — Stockholders of the Twin Falls Canal Co. will hold an annual meeting at 10 a.m. Jan. 11 in the company's office on Second Avenue West.

After convening at the company office, the stockholders and officers will recess briefly to reconvene at the College of Southern Idaho in Room 108 in the vocational building.

During the day-long meeting, the stockholders will elect directors to fill all five positions on the board and will hear reports on such things as the replacement dam project at American Falls and the proposed of Canyon View Irrigation Co. to use Twin Falls Canal Co. canals to carry the new company's water.

Bob Clay, office manager for the canal company, said four of the five incumbent directors are seeking re-election. Fay Frahm, Hansen, who has served on the board the past 25 years, is not seeking re-election. Running for the board position from the east end of Twin Falls County is Brian Harris Jr., Hansen.

Other incumbents seeking re-election include Joe Barinaga, Castleford, chairman; Bill Watt, Bush; Bill Rude, Filer, and Tom Olmstead, Twin Falls.

Reports will be given by company manager Clifford Montgomery, Robert Clay, the company auditor and the company attorney.

Polls will be kept open for voting on the directors until 6 p.m. Those elected will meet the following day to reorganize the board.

Dry weather causes winter wheat concern

"Nobody knows just what it has done over here," Herbert McCowan, Shoshone grower, said about the dry weather. "I put it in just after I got my spuds out without sprinkling so much as a drop of water on it."

The soft white winter wheat planted in September or October in the Magic Valley would normally be up by this time of year. But without moisture, even wheat planted in moist ground has not sprouted yet, according to McCowan.

On the Salmon Tract, conditions are similar to those near Shoshone, according to grower Richard Parrott, although some farmers got stands before dry conditions set in.

"Some is up. Some was irrigated late and had ample moisture," Parrott said. "I'd say most fields have spotty stands depending upon when they were planted."

Parrott continued, "There is a lot of it that has started to come up and is not making any progress because it doesn't have any moisture." Parrott's crop is like McCowan's and neither man knows what may be the outcome.

"Most of mine hasn't even come up," Parrott explained. "I may be in better shape because it hasn't come up. It may come up if it rains, but I would rather that it was up and that it would rain."

McCowan speculated about growers in his area. "If it rains early in the spring, we could be okay. It's been a heck of a year for anything we put in," he said.

Harry Guenther, University of Idaho extension agronomist, said, "We're at a point where we are starting to worry about it (winter wheat). You really can't tell until you've got it in the bag."

Guenther said it is possible some growers will lose their stand without the moisture and protective covering of snow usually present at this time of year.

He said the soft white winter wheat grown in the Magic Valley and the Treasure Valley is more susceptible to damage by drought conditions than is the hard red winter wheat grown in the upper Snake River Valley.

He added, however, the prospects for a crop in the dry country of eastern Idaho do not look promising because the dry ground has frozen before being covered with snow.

"In eastern Idaho, the ground is frozen and if the snow does fall, it will probably just thaw and run off," Guenther said. "Even with good moisture for the rest of the year, the prospects may not be good."

"Northern Idaho is dry, too, according to Guenther."

"I was just up in northern Idaho last week," Guenther said. "I think they are sweating more than we are because of the exposure of the hills to the wind. They don't have the options we have here."

Guenther said Magic Valley growers could still turn to a number of other crops if the winter wheat fails.

"We could go to spring wheat or barley," he said. "If we lose this crop, we could go in with a good yielding spring wheat and obtain yields of about 85 per cent of winter wheat."

"Mine is still in the ground," McCowan said about his winter wheat crop. "I'll probably go in and redrill with spring grain on my field."

Jerome studies mishaps

JEROME — Jerome police investigated a series of minor accidents Thursday. No injuries were reported.

The mishaps started when a wheel dropped off a church bus at Main and Adams. The bus, reportedly empty, was hauled to the bus barn.

Throughout the afternoon and evening two-car collisions occurred at First and Lincoln Street; in the 300 block of Main Street, and at Eighth and Lincoln.

Names of drivers were not available, according to personnel in the joint city-county law enforcement dispatch office.

Twin Falls taxes on rise again

TWIN FALLS — There is only one sure thing about taxes — they keep going up.

The results of a five-year reassessment of all property in Twin Falls County show a 16 per cent increase in the county's total assessed valuation.

Assessor Ron Taylor said the total figure climbed from $71 million to about $82 million in five years, with the reassessment being made in the last year.

At the same time, the tax levies dropped about six per cent. About half the increase comes from new growth and improvements. Taxpayers this year paid a total of $8.07 million, including utilities. The total last year was $7.47 million.

Under state law, all counties were required to begin a revaluation program five years ago, covering one-fifth of the county property each year. Taylor said some counties put each year's completed revaluation figures on the tax rolls at the end of the year.

In Twin Falls County, however, it was decided to add all the new values at the end of the five-year period in fairness to taxpayers, Taylor said.

Another five-year revaluation must begin again this year on the same basis as before, with one-fifth of the county covered each year.

Taylor says this will not be as big an undertaking as before since the new values have been set. He said assessors need only look for improvements, additions and new structures.

The previous five-year program was conducted by an appraisal firm for $361,729 plus some supplies and materials handled by the county.

County Commission Chairman Merl E. Leonard said the county does not plan to have someone do the coming five-year reappraisal. If there is a contract, he said, it will cover commercial property and mobile homes only, with the assessor's staff handling the farms and residential property.

Taylor said the state tax commission is attempting to require all counties to assess property on the basis of 100 per cent of market value. In Twin Falls County, most property is now assessed at a 40 to 50 per cent and the tax rate figure of 17 per cent is then applied to this. By 1982 this will be 20 per cent.

Taylor, one of several assessors in the state opposing this requirement, said if the base were applied to the full 100 per cent market value of property, the taxing ability would double in the county.

"The theory is that levies would be reduced accordingly, but it's hard to believe taxing units would reduce accordingly," he said.

Taylor said if a highway district, school district or other agency had an opportunity to double its income and was facing a number of needs or having difficulty living within its present budget, it is not likely the levies would be reduced to bring in the same amount of money as when the assessment was set at 50 per cent.

A court order was obtained by the tax commission against Ada County this year, requiring that county to go to the 100 per cent figure.

"We are still fighting it here, and I will continue to fight it as long as I'm in office, but we never knew when the requirement may be applied to all counties," Taylor said.

School districts, for example, receive state funds on a matching basis, which would mean a considerable benefit under such a 100 per cent system since state law allows them to levy from, 22 to 27 mills. Even at the minimum figure, there would be a sizable tax increase.

Some mobile home owners found their tax bills much higher this year. Taylor said this county and others had been following a depreciation rate which the tax commission felt was too drastic. As a result, the state tax commission established a depreciation rate for all counties to follow and many older mobile homes were assessed at a considerably higher rate this year.

County Treasurer Ruth Jones said her office received a number of inquiries and complaints at tax time from mobile home owners. She said retired couples living on fixed incomes found the increases hard to take.

In the future, Taylor said, each mobile home must be inspected and assessed on a basis of condition, improvements and model. In the past, the year of manufacture and size of the mobile home were the major determining factors. They are about 1,800 mobile homes in Twin Falls County, Taylor said.

Mrs. Jones said her office is still working on the December tax payment and will probably need another two weeks before all of the payments received by the Dec. 20 deadline can be opened and posted.

She said several large boxes of mail are still waiting to be opened and tax returns computed. "This is not unusual," she said. "We always get most of the payments in the last day," she said.

Last year her office collected all of the more than $7 million but about $100,000, one of the best percentages in the state. Mrs. Jones said she expects this year's collections will run about the same.

CASHIER at the Mail Cinema, Pam Parker, was on the job.

Women lose fight

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court again has ruled against two classes of women — divorcees caring for small or handicapped children, and married women desiring to retain their own names for all legal purposes.

The court unanimously held last week that when a wage earner retires or is disabled Social Security benefits can be denied a divorced wife under age 62 burdened with child care, while granted to married women in the same circumstances.

The court also rejected the appeal of a Lexington, Ky., woman who used her maiden name for social and legal purposes but was prevented from using it on her driver's license.

Sylvia Scott Whitlow, an instructor at the University of Kentucky School of Education, sued to challenge an unwritten regulation of the state Driver Licensing Division requiring married names. She was told her license had to show Van Tubergen, her husband's last name.

In a lower court Ms. Whitlow's arguments foundered on a 1972 action by the Supreme Court upholding a similar practice in Alabama. The justices rejected her appeal without comment.

The Social Security case was brought by Mrs. Helen de Castro of Chicago, 56 at the time, who was caring for a 24-year-old retarded daughter. She was denied benefits because she had not reached 62 when her former husband retired, although had she still been married to him she would have been eligible.

In recent years the court has declared unconstitutional a part of the Social Security Act providing survivors' benefits to young mothers but not to young fathers. On the other hand it has upheld a provision which in general barred widows' benefits to women married to the wage earner less than nine months.

Speaking for the court in the de Castro case, Justice Potter Stewart said Congress does not act unconstitutionally merely because classifications under its laws are imperfect or in practice result in some inequality.

He said the purpose of the old-age and disability aspects of the Social Security system is not simply to pay money to those who need it most but to provide workers and their families with "basic protection against hardships created by the loss of earnings."

"Divorced by its nature works a drastic change in the economic and personal relationship between husband and wife," Stewart said. "Congress could have rationally assumed that divorced husbands and wives depend less on each other for financial and other support than do couples who stay married."

Last week the justices ruled that employers do not violate federal law by excluding pregnancy from their disability insurance plans.

Oklahoma batters Wyoming in Fiesta bowl

TEMPE, Ariz. (UPI) — Fred Akers brought the wishbone offense to Wyoming two years ago. Christmas afternoon in the Fiesta Bowl, the Cowboys got a lesson from a master at the wishbone.

The Oklahoma Sooners, directed by elusive quarterback Thomas Lott, showed their four-man running attack early and often in demolishing the Cowboys 41-7 in the sixth renewal of the Fiesta.

The 13th-ranked Sooners were not only devastating in operating the wishbone, but were just as good at stopping it. In fact, by halftime, Wyoming had only 22 yards rushing while each of the Sooners' backfield starters exceeded that total.

With the teams running identical offenses, winning Coach Barry Switzer summed up the difference in one word — "personnel."

"People make things happen," Switzer said in the happy Oklahoma dressing room. Elvis Peacock, with two touch-downs, and Uwe Von Schamann, with field goals of 32 and 50 yards, led the Big Eight Sooners.

Oklahoma put together touchdown drives of 80, 53, 82 and 61 yards and Switzer substituted freely after a 27-0 lead midway in the third quarter, with 16 different backs carrying the ball for Oklahoma. As evidence of their mastery in the game, the Sooners didn't have to punt once.

Wyoming's only score came with 24 seconds left in the game when Robbie Wright went over from the one to climax a 92-yard drive.

Oklahoma took the opening kickoff and marched 80 yards in 14 plays, taking six minutes, with Peacock going over from the three for the touchdown.

Wyoming, which finished the regular season as co-champion of the Western Athletic Conference and beat co-champion Brigham Young to earn the right to play in the Fiesta Bowl, managed only three yards after taking the ensuing kick at the 13, and the Sooners look over at their own 47. Horace Ivory went over from the four 10 plays later for Oklahoma's second score with 3:31 remaining in the first quarter.

Oklahoma finished the regular season as one of three co-champions in the Big Eight, but lost any chance to go to the Orange Bowl because of its loss to Colorado.

Both teams were beset by fumbles in the second quarter,

Oklahoma losing two of five and Wyoming one of three. The only scoring was Von Schamann's two field goals, with Oklahoma taking a 20-0 lead into the locker room at halftime.

Wyoming's only serious threat before its touchdown drive came after Lalfail Jones handed off to Kevin LePore, who returned the second half kickoff to the Wyoming 44. With Don Clayton taking over at quarterback from Marc Cousins, the Cowboys marched to the Oklahoma 22, but Terry Peters intercepted a pass at the 8 and returned it to the 18.

The Sooners then marched 82 yards in nine plays, with Peacock — who had a 23-yard sprint during the drive — scoring from the 15.

Clayton threw three more interceptions, two of them setting up Oklahoma touchdowns.

OKLAHOMA'S Horace Ivory, with Greg Roberts running interference, sweeps around end for a four-yard touchdown Saturday. The 13th-ranked Sooners whipped Wyoming 41-7 in the Fiesta bowl. (UPI telephoto)

Touchdown bound

Kramer-led Gray batters Blue 31-10

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — "They gave us a good southern whipping," said Missouri defensive tackle Randy Frisch after the Gray team ripped a team from the north 31-10 in the 28th annual Blue-Gray College All-Star Game.

Frisch and his defensive teammates watched helplessly Friday as Rice quarterback Tommy Kramer put on an aerial show that justified his All-American selection and established him as a top pro prospect.

Kramer, who led the nation in passing and total offense this year, threw three touchdown passes, two of them to Ahlenn Christian's Johnny Perkins and one to his Rice teammate Ken Roy.

"I was real satisfied with my performance," said Kramer, who was voted the game's most valuable player. "After we scored the first touchdown in the second half, things got a little sleepier."

By then the score was 31-3, and the Gray offense seemed to go to sleep. It didn't matter, because the Blue defense never did generate much action. Its only touchdown came late in the final quarter when Missouri's Steve Pisarkiewicz hit Arizona's Keith Hartwig with an 11-yard scoring pass.

When Kramer wasn't throwing, Sidney Thornton was running, and the northern defenders didn't enjoy that show either.

Thornton, a little noticed back from Northeast Louisiana State, rambled for 131 yards in 11 carries to set a Blue-Gray record. He scored the Gray's first touchdown on a one-yard leap, after setting the score up with runs of 20 and 21 yards.

"It was a great game," said Thornton. "Boy, I wish I could have played all year behind this offensive line."

Another Blue-Gray record was set by Stanford's Mike Michel, whose 44-yard field goal for the north was the longest ever in the classic. Auburn's Neil O'Donoghue booted a 32-yarder for the south.

Kramer began the fireworks the first time he touched the ball, hurling a 28-yard scoring strike to Perkins. Memphis State's Eric Harris had returned an intercepted pass 20 yards to the 28 on the previous play.

The north took the next kickoff, and again it was trouble. A fumble gave the southerners the ball on the Blue 35. Seven plays later Kramer and Perkins teamed up on a 10-yard effort, and it was 14-0.

Kramer's final scoring pass, in the second quarter, was also set up by an interception, this one by South Carolina's Bill Currier. The five-yard pass to Roy made the score 21-3.

The Gray victory gave it a 21-16 lead in the series. One game, during World War II, featured high school teams and is not counted.

Furman favored

GREENVILLE, S.C. (UPI) — The 17th annual Poinsettia Classic opens Wednesday at the 6,000-seat Memorial Auditorium and Furman, the only team with a losing record, is expected to battle Columbia for the title.

The Paladins, 2-3, may find their opening round game against Navy more than they can handle, however.

Navy, 5-3, is off to its best start in 15 years under new coach Bob Hamilton and includes among its conquests a 71-67 victory over highly respected Pennsylvania.

Bulls trip Kings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Norm Van Lier scored his only two field goals of the game to start the fourth quarter, breaking open a tight contest and sending the Chicago Bulls to a 96-91 nationally televised victory over the Kansas City Kings Saturday, their ninth win in 11 games.

G.F. outlaw eage meet opens Monday

GLENN'S FERRY — The sixth annual Glenns Ferry Lions' outlaw basketball tournament will open Monday night at the Glenns Ferry gymnasium.

The tournament will run Monday and Tuesday with the consolation and championship finals slated for Wednesday.

In the opening round, Glenns Ferry Napa Auto Parts will meet Duffy's Real Estate of Boise at 7 p.m.; Troutner Construction, Boise, vs. Red Barn Market of Mountain Home at 8 p.m.; LeMayne Realty, Twin Falls, vs. Shrum Motors of Glenns Ferry at 9 p.m., and T.E. Tavern of Boise vs. Dal'Pau Delta at 10 p.m.

The first night losers will meet at 7 and 8 p.m. Tuesday with the winners going in the second two games. The consolation finals will begin at 7 p.m. Wednesday with the title to be decided at 8 p.m.

Munson honored

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Baseball Writers Association will honor American League Most Valuable Player Thurman Munson of the New York Yankees at its annual dinner next month, it was announced this week.

The all-star catcher, one of the few bright spots for the Yankees during the 1976 World Series, which they lost in four straight games to the Cincinnati Reds — will be honored for World Series achievement.

During the series, Munson went to bat 17 times, got nine hits, scored two runs, knocked in one, made no errors and batted .529 to lead his club.

Fight license denied

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — The Nevada State Athletic Commission Saturday refused to license heavyweight Larry Middleton for a proposed fight with former world champion George Foreman.

"Middleton has traumatic cataracts in both eyes," said Jim Deskin, executive secretary of the commission. "According to our ophthalmologist, the condition is progressively getting worse."

Dorsett adds award

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Tony Dorsett, the speedster who gained more yards than any running back in the history of college football for the University of Pittsburgh, has been named winner of the Dapper Dan Award for 1976.

Winner of the Helmsman Trophy and many other honors, Dorsett cracked a charmed circle at home by becoming the first collegian and the first amateur athlete to win the award, emblematic of the most outstanding sports accomplishment in the Pittsburgh area.

Knox lands Vikings

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — Coach Chuck Knox of the Los Angeles Rams seemed to open a sackful of "good will toward men" Saturday when he ticked off the praises of the Minnesota Vikings, his team's foe in Sunday's National Football Conference title game.

"We'll need a great defensive game to stop the Vikings," Knox said at a Christmas news conference following a Rams' practice session at Minnesota's Metropolitan Stadium.

"Francis Tarkenton on your team is like having an offensive coordinator at quarterback and the entire team radiates his confidence."

Both Steelers and Raiders hope to change history

OAKLAND (UPI) — The Pittsburgh Steelers need a victory for a return trip to the Super Bowl for a third straight time, while the Oakland Raiders want to come out on top so they can shed their also-ran label.

That, in essence, capsulizes the NFL's American Conference title game between the two powers today at the Oakland Coliseum.

The winner will advance to the Super Bowl in Pasadena, Calif., against the NFC representative, either Minnesota or Los Angeles, Jan. 2.

To reach the AFC finals, the Steelers, with their solid "Steel Curtain" defense and a pulverizing offense, ran roughshod over the Baltimore Colts 49-14, while the Raiders scored in the final 10 seconds on a quarterback rollout by Ken Stabler to down the New England Patriots 24-21.

"We know we have to win today to make it to the Super Bowl again," said defensive tackle Joe Greene earlier in the week. "Everybody knows that. So that's why we have to get out there and beat those guys. Past records or words aren't going to do it for us. It's up to us."

A return to the Super Bowl by Pittsburgh would mark the second time an NFL team has played in the game three consecutive years and give the Steelers the chance to win the Super Bowl a record third consecutive time. The Miami Dolphins were in three Super Bowls in a row, but lost in their first appearance before winning two straight.

For the Raiders, they played in Super Bowl II and advanced to the AFC championship round eight out of the last nine seasons. However, each time they either lost in the first round or in the conference title game.

"It's annoying," said linebacker Phil Villapiano, who's been around for most of the eliminations. "But nothing can be done about what happened before. Everything's in front of us again and it's up to us to make the most of it."

Pittsburgh has been installed as a four-point favorite, but a closer game is expected because of week-long injuries to star running backs Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier, who were banged up in the Baltimore contest. Neither one of the 1,000-yard gainers participated in workouts during the week and are listed as questionable starters. In addition, back-up Frenchy Fuqua is only a "probable" performer because of a strained calf muscle.

"The Raiders might be looking at this as a big edge for them," Bleier said before the Steelers left snow-covered Pittsburgh for the West Coast. "Our running game is the strongest part of our offense and here we are with three running backs not well."

Oakland's John Madden, however, doesn't buy pre-game word-psyching.

"They'll be ready," he said. "You watch. With the Super Bowl at stake, they'll be healthy."

Quarterback Terry Bradshaw admitted the ground game was the key to Pittsburgh's success.

"What we have to do against the Raiders is to control the line of scrimmage," he said. "We have to keep the ball from their offense and we can do it by controlling the ball with our 70-30 run-pass ratio. We'll have to eat up the clock and score points."

It's a reverse situation for the Raiders, who live and die on the accurate left arm of Ken Stabler. The crafty quarterback completed 66.7 per cent of his passes during the regular season, the best in the NFL, with Fred Biletnikoff, Cliff Branch and Dave Casper his primary targets. The Raiders' lone running threat is Mark van Eeghen, who rushed for 1,012 yards. However, his longest run from scrimmage was only 31 yards.

The Raiders will be facing the NFL's best defensive unit, The Steelers led the league in nine categories, including the lowest pass completion percentage, 42.4.

Earlier, both sides were busy trading threats and counter-threats. It all stemmed from the teams' first meeting in their first game of the season — a 31-28 Oakland triumph — when Oakland's George Atkinson sidelined Lynn Swann with a concussion.

After a continuous flow of words, both sides calmed down. Even the principals said what happened in the past should be forgotten.

Grant says Vikings hoping for best possible weather

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — Turning aside suggestions that his team has a pligger advantage when the Minnesota weather is fiercely cold, Vikings' Coach Bud Grant said Saturday his club wants "the nicest weather we can get" for Sunday's NFC title game with Los Angeles.

Grant was in his usual cynical, satirical mood Christmas Day in the last pre-game news conference. But he indicated that he doesn't look forward to games in zero-degree weather, either.

"We'd like the nicest weather as we can get," said Grant, who has refused to allow his team to use sideline heaters in the past. "It looks like it's gonna be another break in the weather — in the 20s, which is really a little above the seasonal average."

Earlier forecasts called for temperatures in the teens Sunday but the weather service revised its outlook.

Grant's forecast for the game was more reserved.

"Hopefully, we're playing our best at this time, but I think the Rams have a similar situation," he said.

"They knew they were going to be in the playoffs at an early date so that they could go along in preparation for that date. They had a spirited game last week against Dallas, an old nemesis of theirs, and you saw our emotions show (in the Vikings' one-sided playoff win over Washington) so I don't think they'll be any less from either team this week."

Grant said reserve Amos Martin would be in the starting lineup, replacing regular middle linebacker Jeff Siemon, sidelined with a pulled calf muscle. Asked if Siemon would suit up for the game, he said, "Yes," then paused and said, "unless we change our minds just before the game."

Grant's response left reporters confused as to whether he was referring to suiting up or starting the All-Pro Siemon.

Then he added, "Well, miracles...this is the season of miracles."

Missouri favored to take Big Eight holiday tourney

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — They don't need any official standings for the Big Eight basketball tournament any more. Everyone knows Missouri is going to be the favorite for the holiday affair.

Over the last five years, Norm Stewart's team has managed to win the title four times, winning 15 of its last 16 tournament games. And this year Missouri heads into the Big Eight affair looking for its third tournament title of the basketball season.

Missouri won its own Show Me Classic for the fourth straight year and last weekend stunned Texas El Paso by winning the Sun Carnival, becoming only the fourth team other than UTEP to win that tournament in its 16 years. Add-to that the fact that Missouri enters the 31st Big Eight Preseason Tournament in the easiest bracket, Missouri is the only member of the league's so-called elite four — Missouri, Kansas, Kansas State and Oklahoma — in its bracket, and the Tigers have the advantage of playing in the first day of the tournament.

Missouri opens tournament play on Monday in the 7:05 game with Iowa State. Oklahoma State plays Kansas State in the next game. On Tuesday, Colorado meets Nebraska while Kansas takes on Oklahoma in the final first-round game.

By playing on the first day,

Missouri gets to take Tuesday off. The winner of the Missouri-Iowa State game advances to the Wednesday semifinals against the Colorado-Nebraska winner. Meanwhile, the Kansas-Oklahoma victor meets the Kansas State-Oklahoma State winner.

Coming into the tournament Iowa State is the only conference team with a losing record at 3-4 and, at that, the Cyclones have already won as many games under first-year coach Lynn Nance as they did all last season.

Oklahoma has been the most impressive team. Starting two freshmen and two sophomores, second-year coach Dave Bliss' team is 7-1, with its lone loss a 100-89 decision Wednesday night to Nevada-Las Vegas in the finals of the Las Vegas school's own tournament.

Kansas, which has the biggest front line with 7-foot-2 sophomore center Paul Mokeski, brings a 7-2 record into the tournament and Missouri is 6-2, having lost its season opener to Southern Illinois and then losing a two-point decision at Toledo Dec. 7.

Kansas State comes into the tournament 6-3 and coming off a 64-62 loss at unbeaten Minnesota on Thursday; Nebraska is 6-4; Colorado 5-3, including a five-game win streak for the first time since 1962-63; and Oklahoma State 4-4.

Vikings willing to take one more super bowl try

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — No team has lost more Super Bowls than the Minnesota Vikings but they're ready for one more try.

Standing in the way are the Los Angeles Rams and they'll clash today at Metropolitan Stadium—for the National Conference championship and a berth in Super Bowl XI in Pasadena, Calif., on Jan. 9.

Today's winner will meet the winner of the Pittsburgh-Oakland game for the National Football League title. The Vikings, who lost their three previous Super Bowl appearances to Kansas City, Miami and Pittsburgh, walked off with the NFC Central Division title with an 11-2-1 record and then trounced Washington 35-20 in an opening round playoff last week.

Los Angeles, the runaway winner in the NFC West with a 10-3-1 record, ousted defending NFC champion Dallas 14-13 last week. The Rams have won the Western Division title the last four years but have never made it to the Super Bowl.

The National Weather Service predicted cold, clear weather, with temperatures in the 15-20 degree area for the game, which will match Minnesota's high-powered offense against the Rams' solid defense, which shut down Dallas and its star quarterback, Roger Staubach, last week.

Minnesota's offense revolves around quarterback Fran Tarkenton, who virtually has rewritten the NFL record book in passing, running back Chuck Foreman, the Player of the Year in the NFC, and Sammie White, a rookie from Grambling who led the NFC this season with 10 touchdown receptions.

The Rams' defense is anchored by 15-year veteran tackle Merlin Olsen, who will be retiring after this season, and second-year cornerback Monte Jackson, who led the NFL with 10 interceptions this season.

The teams met earlier this year in the second game of the season and battled to a 10-10 tie.

"We didn't decide anything in five quarters against the Rams earlier this year," said Viking Coach Bud Grant. "The continuation of that game should prove interesting, to say the least. The Rams like to run the ball every down. We hope to force them to pass. Then there is a greater margin for error."

Grant was referring to Pat Haden, the rookie who has become the Rams' No. 1 quarterback this season. Haden's inexperience could be the key factor today.

"It'll be another physical battle," said Grant. "They have a strong defensive unit and one of the biggest offensive lines in football. They're a running team with fine backs in Lawrence McCutcheon and John Campbell. It's a predictable offense but not too many people have stopped it."

Bowl coaches worry for different reasons

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — Dan Devine is worried that his Notre Dame team may have been "sitting around too long," while Penn State's Joe Paterno says he's concerned that his team might be "working too hard."

The coaches for the Irish and the Nittany Lions are hoping that their teams reach their peak physically and mentally when they clash Monday night in the Gator Bowl. Kickoff for the nationally televised game is 9:10 p.m.

"I'm concerned we're going to work too hard," said Paterno, "and I just hope we don't get stale."

Penn State arrived in Jacksonville with a week's solid preparation already under its belt and upon arriving there last Monday Paterno said the team had the best preparation of any of his bowl teams.

But Devine was singing another tune.

"We've had less work at the bowl site than I have in the past," he said.

"This was because of exams. So I'm working a little harder at the bowl site than I have in the past."

Devine recalled that on Tuesday, the day the team arrived in Jacksonville, it spent 12 hours sitting — in the buses that took it from snowbound South Bend, Ind., to Chicago, then waiting for the equipment and finally in the plane.

"The players have just started looking like they're getting over sitting down for so long," he said. "But I don't think it will be any disadvantage."

Both coaches have winning records in post-season bowl games — Paterno is 5-2-1 and Devine, 4-2. Among Paterno's victories was a 10-3 win over a Devine-coached Missouri squad in the 1970 Orange Bowl.

Penn State will be making its fourth appearance in the Gator Bowl: In 1961, the Nittany Lions beat Georgia Tech, 30-15; in 1962, they bowed to Florida, 17-7; and in 1967, they tied Florida State, 17-17.

It's the first appearance for the Irish in the Gator Bowl.

Both teams are young and strong and the game could be dominated by their defensive squads.

"We've got to play good defense and not let them have the big play in their passing game," Paterno said. "They've got a good passing game."

Devine said, "Joe and his staff don't give you anything. When you're out — sound coaching like Penn State has you'll find a tough defense. It should be tough to move the ball. It probably will be a low scoring game."

Paterno said he was impressed with the size of Notre Dame's defensive line, said Penn State has no record, will be directed by senior quarterback Rick Slagter.

Al Hunter, who gained 1,658 yards during the regular season to become the first Notre Dame back to break the 1,000-yard mark in a single season, is the outstanding running back.

Penn State's defense is led by All-America linebacker Kurt Allerman and junior safety Gary Petercuk.

Quarterbacking the 74 Nittany Lions will be Chuck Fudna, who completed 83 of his 167 passes for 1,550 yards.

Paterno alternates his running backs, with Junior Steve Geise sharing the tailback job with freshmen Mike Guman and Matt Suhey.

The game is the fifth meeting between the two teams and Notre Dame holds a 3-1 lead in the series.

Six named to NFL club for third year

NEW YORK (UPI) — National Football League rushing leader O.J. Simpson of Buffalo was one of six players named today to the Professional Football Writers of America all-pro team for the third consecutive year.

Also selected all-pro for the third straight year was Minnesota offensive tackle Ron Yary, Miami center Jim Langer, Los Angeles defensive end Jack Youngblood, Pittsburgh linebacker Jack Ham, Washington safety Ken Houston and Oakland punter Ray Guy.

The squad, chosen by a vote of 350 sportswriters who write NFL throughout the season, was split evenly between the National and American Conferences.

Simpson, who rushed for 1,503 yards, was joined in the backfield by Chicago's second-year running back Walter Payton and Baltimore quarterback Bert Jones. Also selected on the offensive were wide receivers Cliff Branch of Oakland and Drew Pearson of Dallas, tackle Dan Dierdorf of St. Louis, guards Joe Delamater of Buffalo and John Hannah of New England, tight end Dave Casper of St. Louis and place kicker Jim Bakken of St. Louis.

Other defensive selections were end Tommy Hart of San Francisco, tackle Willie Chambers of Chicago and Jerry Sherk of Cleveland, linebackers Jack Lambert of Pittsburgh and Robert Brazile of Houston, cornerbacks Monte Jackson of Los Angeles and Roger Wehrli of St. Louis and safety Cliff Harris of Dallas.

The overall MVP will be selected in Los Angeles Jan. 6 and honored with a trophy presented by the sponsoring Schick Corporation.

Guides find little wilderness solace

By JEFF SHER
Times-News writer

The Idaho Primitive Area will soon become a wilderness by an act of Congress.

The difference between a primitive area and a wilderness is that a wilderness is forever.

You would think Idaho's outfitters and guides who operate in the primitive area would rejoice at the permanent establishment of a game preserve of well over a million acres.

Well, the outfitters like the idea of a permanent wilderness, but they don't like some of the regulations devised to make the wilderness permanent.

Under the Wilderness Act of 1964, areas designated as wilderness are to be managed with the intent of keeping them wild, displaying as few signs of human habitation as possible, including permanent hunting camps.

According to the act, a wilderness is also a place where the cars will not be assailed by the high-pitched whine of chain saws (or any other mechanical equipment).

Outfitters say many of their number probably cannot make a profit without permanent camps and chain saws.

Outfitters claim that if they can not use chain saws, they will have to hire full-time woodcutters for the whole season or two men to cut wood for one month, at an added cost of about $200 per man per month.

The outfitters aren't asking to be able to go out every night before the evening meal and shatter the twilight silence in search of firewood. They say they can get by if they can use their chain saws only a couple of days a year.

This does not seem unreasonable. Permits could be issued for the use of chain saws for a few days in spring or late fall when there would be less traffic in the woods.

In addition, the use of chain saws would probably cause less environmental damage in the long run than either hand cutting or wood gathering.

A man with a chain saw, knowing he won't have to laboriously cut wood by hand as well as carry and stack it, may be more likely to take into account environmental concerns as well as proximity to camp when selecting wood for cutting.

The issue of permanent camps, however, is not so simple. Wilderness requirements allow no year-round storage of equipment and no permanent structures. Thus, outfitters would have to pack their gear in and out every year and tear down any structures at the end of each season.

Outfitters say they have always kept permanent caches of equipment in the primitive area back country in unobtrusive six foot by six foot structures. In these structures they store the extensive assortment of equipment they feel is necessary to make their clients as comfortable as possible.

Outfitters say they cannot afford to pack equipment, including stoves, utensils and tools, in and out every year.

But if a backpacker can carry everything he needs for two weeks on his own back, you would think a horse could carry everything a man needs and then some.

The outfitters seem to be concerned that the level of luxury which they now provide may be greatly reduced. If they cannot store beds in the back country or pack them in every year, their clients may be forced to sleep on the cold, hard ground.

They might have to sit on logs and eat food (which will still be cooked for them) out of mess kits.

Those wishing to benefit from the outfitters' considerable hunting and fishing expertise may have to forego some of their usual creature comforts to gain their trophies.

What the outfitters may not realize, is that this may be exactly the kind of experience many people want and need nowadays.

Many people today seem to be seeking an experience which is different from the structured, antiseptic, machine-oriented environment in which they spend most of their time.

They want adventure. They want to be exposed to the uncontrolled side of life and the elements. They don't want to merely transport their living rooms to the back country and then step out their front door for a morning's shooting.

The greater the struggle for the trophy, the greater the feeling of accomplishment, the better the story in the retelling.

The Wilderness Act seems to reflect this approach to wilderness. Wilderness is the value to be preserved, not man's comfort while in the wilderness.

We must adapt to the ways of the wild in order to preserve wild lands in their natural state.

People who live in the wild or on the fringes of the wild have learned to adapt to nature. They know the mountains and the raging mountain storms and the habits of the animals that share their land.

City dwellers, who often can't see the ground for the pavement, are coming to crave the experience which many Idahoans take for granted. They want to become acquainted or reacquainted with natural rhythms and sensations which are hard to perceive in city canyons.

Perhaps those who come to Idaho seeking only trophies they can hang on their walls need more than anyone to meet the wilderness on their own terms and not on theirs.

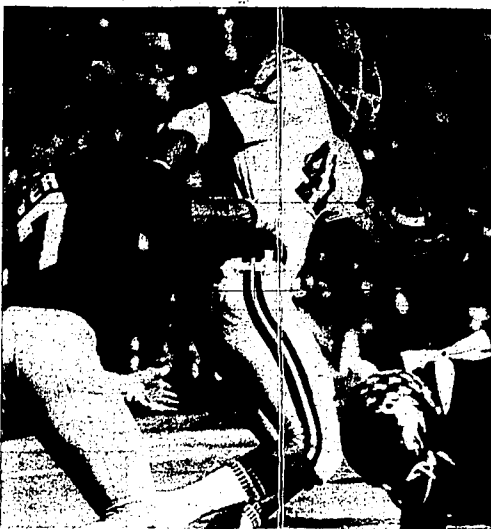

Those who cannot conceive of going without their usual conveniences probably have most need of some time apart from the contrivances which circumscribe their lives.

Perhaps they most need the reawakening of the senses which can come from direct, unfiltered contact with the outdoors.

How can you appreciate civilization if you have nothing to compare it to?

Many no longer view the wilderness as a hostile environment needing to be tamed, but as a place to learn the ways of nature, wilderness skills and survival, and to gain insight into themselves.

The outfitters are right when they say they provide the only means of access to the wilderness for many people. We need the outfitters to help teach people how to act in the wild so that they will not destroy that which they cherish through ignorance.

Telephone survey indicates south hills deer hunt 'good'

By STU MURRELL
Regional Staff Correspondent

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game conducted a recent telephone survey which showed deer hunters who actually hunted had 53 per cent success in Unit 44 and 52.5 per cent in Unit 55.

This is a high success rate considering that two weeks of the 19 day season were for two-point bucks or better. The harvest was estimated at 189 bucks and 44 does in Unit 44.

The hunters in Unit 55 bagged 567 bucks and 230 does.

According to Jerry Thiessen, Big Game Supervisor, Boise, this ratio of about 70-80 per cent bucks is quite close to the desired level for proper management of those herds we wish to increase.

A number of additional questions were asked of the 15 per cent of the hunters sampled from each unit. There was a high percentage of those that did not hunt at all in Unit 44. This amounted to 20 per cent and could possibly be attributed to the more restrictive regulations this year in Unit 44.

Persons drawing in this unit were required to have their deer tag validated prior to hunting and the permit holder could not hunt in any other unit until October 27, the opening day. In contrast, 2.6 per cent of the permit holders did not hunt in Unit 55.

Hunters in Unit 55 who hunted only during the deer season portion of the season had a 72 per cent success and expended an average of 2.0 days for their hunt. Those who hunted just during the bucks-only season had a 50 per cent success and expended almost three days of hunting. Sportsmen hunting throughout both types of seasons had a 10 per cent success and expended six days of hunting.

A total of 4,525 man-days of hunting were expended by the 1,435 hunters who participated in Unit 55. Ninetwo in Unit 44 spent an average of 1.8 days of hunting with a total number of 722 man-days of hunting.

It was fortunate to have the information on Unit 55 this year as we were able to point out the importance of the area to the Senate Interior Committee when the City of Rocks hearing was held in Burley on December 14. It showed that Unit 55 produced a significant per cent of the harvest in the six units south of the Snake River in Region 4. Eliminating 32,000 acres from this important big game unit by creation of a National Monument would have a significant impact on deer hunters drawing on the unit due to probable reduction of permits and huntable area.

There are some important changes in the definitions that help to clarify and administer the law. A "possession limit" shall mean the maximum limit in number of amount of wildlife which may be lawfully in the possession of a person and apply to possession in the field or being transported to final place of consumption or storage. The "final place" has been interpreted to mean the place a person lives, not a trailer or camper. Therefore, sportsman must not have more than a possession limit prior to arriving home.

There has been confusion about party hunting which has always been illegal but a new definition of "bag limit" makes it quite clear that everyone must shoot his own game. "Bag limit" shall mean the maximum number of wildlife which may be legally taken, caught or killed by any one person for any particular period of time. The term shall be construed to mean an individual, independent effort and shall not be interpreted in any manner as to allow one individual to take more than his "bag limit" toward filling the "bag limit" of another.

The basic hunting license law now reads "It is misdemeanor for any person to hunt, trap, or fish for or take any wild animal, bird or fish of this state or have in his possession any uncased firearm while in the fields or forests of the state, without first having procured a license." An "uncased firearm" is any rifle, pistol, or shotgun which is being openly carried while hunting. A pistol in a holster is considered cased. This law applies to any wildlife, including hunting predators or non-game animals such as ground squirrels.

There is still nothing in the Code which prohibits citizens of the United States who are residents of the State of Idaho from carrying arms for the protection of life and property.

The previous code stated any waste of game had to be with "malicious intent." Now a person can be charged with "wasteful destruction of wildlife" if through carelessness, neglect, or otherwise to cause the waste of any game bird, game animal, or game mammal.

Any person who kills or wounds any portion thereof usually eaten by humans. A person not properly taking care of his big game animal, causing it to spoil, could now be charged under this new interpretation.

New wildlife code effective Jan. 1

By STU MURRELL
Regional Staff Correspondent

The new Fish and Game Code will go into effect January 1st and helps to clarify a number of laws that were in the previous code. The State Legislature approved this re-codification in their last session.

The general provisions which give the Fish and Game Commission their powers and duties remain unchanged. The five commission members are appointed by the Governor, with approval of the Senate, for a term of six years. The Commission in turn has the authority to appoint the Director of the Department of Fish and Game, set regulations and preserve, protect, perpetuate and manage all wildlife. The State Legislature still retains the authority to set the Fish and Game Budget, pass on laws pertaining to any changes in fines or license fees and to classify predatory animals. The term "wildlife" as used in the commission powers has been interpreted to mean all wildlife, not just the mammals and birds. For example, there is a season set on the bull frog which is an amphibian. This authority would also hold true for such things as reptiles and crustaceans.

DEAR ABBY: I am 30, college educated, have a good job and money in the bank. I'm 6-foot-2, weight 190, and people tell me I look like Paul Newman.
I like sports, and the theater, and I love people. Older women, children and animals adore me. I come from a good family, smoke only a pipe and drink moderately.
My problem? I am lonesome. I refuse to chase tramps. Girls tell me they like me as a brother. I have more "sisters" than a convent. What's wrong with me?

LONESOME

DEAR LONESOME: Either your description is off, or you are.

get caught

DEAR ABBY: I am almost 20, and for nearly five years I have carried one of your columns in my wallet. It is so worn I can scarcely read it, but it's done me more good than any single thing I've ever read. Please reprint it. Abby, for girls who need the advice as much today as I did then, I am enclosing the column. I am the girl who wrote the letter signed MOTHER HATER.

Sincerely yours,
"WISER NOW"

DEAR "WISER": Yes, I'll reprint the column. And here it is.

DEAR ABBY: You will probably think I am a monster, but I am a girl of 14, and I hate my parents. Especially my mother.

She is so old-fashioned it's pitiful. She wants to pick out all my clothes and tell me how to wear my hair. And I am the only girl in our crowd who doesn't wear eye makeup. She won't let me go in cars with boys. All she worries about is my reputation, and I swear I haven't done anything wrong. She is killing my chances to go with the right kids and be popular.

Don't tell me to talk it over with her because she will only give me a long lecture on this bull about how it's all for my "own good!"

I would like to be able to tell her things, but, heck, I don't want to get killed. I hate to sneak behind her back, but I have no choice. I sure wish I had a different mother.

MOTHER HATER

DEAR MOTHER HATER: Girls your age, who feel as you do, regard all adults as the enemy. Perhaps a letter from a girl your age with a different point of view on the same subject will help you more than any advice I could offer:

DEAR ABBY: I am 14 and think more girls my age should appreciate mothers who love them enough to care about what they do. I feel sorry for young girls my age whose mothers let them go in cars with boys, and wear eye makeup and hairdos that are too old for them.
I am not allowed to go on car dates until I am 16. My mother helps me select my clothes. I wear no makeup to school, and only a little on special occasions. My mother has lived a lot longer than I have, and I have learned from experience that when she forbids me to do something, she always has a good reason for it. I am thankful that I have a mother who loves me enough to raise me right.

FOURTEEN AND LUCKY"

CONFIDENTIAL TO MY READERS: Merry Christmas. And may God bless you and yours.

ABBY

your health

BY LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

Dear Dr. Lamb: I have a condition called right renal nephroptosis, dropped kidney.

I was refused full coverage under my medical insurance because of this condition. What can I expect to go wrong medically with a condition such as this? Is a person subject to infection of the urinary tract with this condition? Should a person with this condition exercise or just be content with walking? I have never been ill with this condition: it was discovered accidentally by the physician with an X-ray.

Dear Reader:

You are not as unusual as you think regardless of what the insurance company ruled. One out of every five adult women has a dropped kidney, and it most often involves the right kidney. It occurs less frequently in men.

The kidney moves around a lot more than you might imagine. It is anchored to the diaphragm and that is partly responsible for the normal mobility of the kidney. It may drop as much as one and a half vertebral spaces in normal people when standing.

If it drops more it is properly called nephroptosis. And in most cases it does not cause any symptoms. It is usually found with an X-ray examination in otherwise normal healthy individuals. In fact, one of the men selected for the astronaut program had the same condition. It didn't keep him out of the program.

A dropped kidney is more likely to be found in a person with a long, thin torso and it may be associated with poor abdominal tone and a tendency for all of the organs to sag when the individual is standing. In this regard I would say you might benefit from an exercise program that strengthens your abdominal muscles.

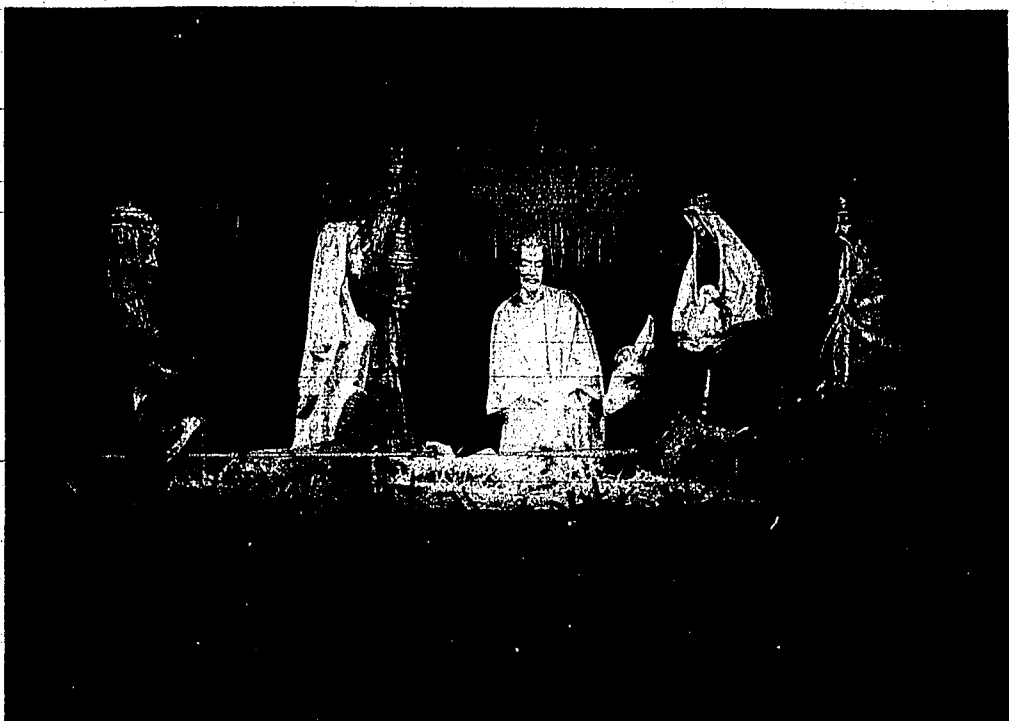

Sit-ups with the knees bent, abdominal tensing and various leg lift exercises may help in this regard. I am sending you The Health Letter number 37, Girls Control: Avoiding the Big Middle, to give you more information on exercise. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Just send your letter to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019. Walking does not use the abdominal muscles much and you will need other exercises to develop and maintain good abdominal tone.

There are some people with a dropped kidney who have problems. The kidney may drop so much that it kinks the inferior and blood vessels to the kidney. This can prevent proper circulation to the kidney and affect its drainage. This may cause severe pain, with nausea and a severe drop in blood pressure. The condition is relieved by lying down. The kidney floats back to normal position and the difficulty caused by kinking goes away.

A few patients also have transitory high blood pressure related to the dropped kidney. The key to evaluating symptoms related to a dropped kidney is noting if they occur while standing and if they disappear when lying flat.

Rarely a person will need to have the kidney tacked into a more permanent position by surgery.

Inflation killed TV suite

© Chicago Sun-Times
CHICAGO — Remember those offensive television commercials of the '50s? Some guy would appear on the tiny black-and-white screen. "This beautiful living room suite for only $250," he would.

The beautiful living room suite usually consisted of an overstuffed couch with a matching chair. Very nubby pink nylon. Then there was a cocktail table, a pair of blond step end tables and two hideous lamps.

It's enough to make a person grateful for inflation. Inflation killed the old $250 living room suite. It now costs about $1,000. But a new type of $250 living room suite is appearing.

It might even cost less. It also looks very different.

One of the best examples is a collection of room-size, overstuffed pillows designed for do-it-yourself types who want an instant room, by the Bunting Co. of Philadelphia.

The furniture is built on a simple molded steel frame. Springs and stuffing have been replaced with a canvas sling stretched across the seat and back and overstuffed fiber-filled pillows. Fabrics are sturdy and colorful.

"We have simplified the design to lower the price of a piece of furniture," explained a Chicago salesman for the firm. "Our market ranges from young marrieds to rental firms to college students to people decorating the porch."

A high-back chair retails for $20. A cocktail table goes for $30.

A pair of low-back chairs linked together form a settee that costs only $100. End tables are $25. An entire living room suite comparable in quantity with the suite of the '50s would cost about $250.

"This is starter furniture," the salesman said. "It might start in an apartment living room and progress through the house to may be the recreation room or den or porch as the couple becomes more affluent."

Child of Christmas 'believes'

BY ERMA BOMBRECK

There is nothing sadder in this world than to awake Christmas morning and not be a child.

Not to feel the cold on your bare feet as you rush to the Christmas tree in the living room. Not to have your eyes sparkle at the wonderment of discovery. Not to rip the ribbons off the shiny boxes with such abandon.

When did the cold, bare feet give way to reason and a pair of sensible bedroom slippers? When did the sparkle and the wonderment give way to depression of a long day? When did a box with a shiny ribbon mean an item on the "charge"?

A child of Christmas doesn't have to be a toddler or a teen. A child of Christmas is anyone who believes that Kings have birthdays. The Christmases you loved so well are gone. What happened?

Maybe they diminished the year you decided to have your Christmas cards printed to send to 1,500 of your "closest friends and dearest obligations." You got too busy to sign your own name.

Maybe it was the year you discovered the traditional Christmas tree was a fire hazard and the needles had to be vacuumed every three hours and you traded its holiday aroma for a silver one that revolved, changed colors, played "Silent Night" and snowed on itself.

Or the year it got to be too much trouble to sit around the table and put popcorn and cranberries on a string. Possibly you lost your childhood the year you solved your gift problems neatly and calmly with a checkbook.

Think about it. It might have been the year you were too rushed to bake and resorted to slice-and-bake with no nonsense. Who needs a bowl to clean—or lick?

Most likely it was the year you were so efficient in paying back all your party obligations. A wonderful little caterer did it for you for $3 per person. Children of Christmas are givers. That's what the day is for. They give thanks, love, gratitude, joy and themselves to one another.

It doesn't necessarily mean

Unique bowl

MRS. CAL—McDonald, Solman, displays bowl made from gum wrappers. Her daughter, Alice, (now Alice Addington of Caldwell), collected gum wrappers when she was in high school here and folded them into one continuous interlocking chain, first tearing each wrapper in half. Mrs. McDonald said she decided to glue the chain together and make a bowl. More than 2,500 gum wrappers went into making a chain 93 feet long. Mrs. McDonald wrapped the chain around a bowl, starting at the bottom. She plans to put a coating on the gum wrappers to preserve the object.

Fortune teller charged in theft

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (UPI) — Fortune teller Rose Marie Yanis, 22, was charged with grand theft for allegedly bilking clients out of large sums by purportedly riding in their bodies of evil spirits and "dead meat" with current-cywrapped tomatoes.

Detectives said Miss Yanis would approach potential victims in stores, telling them they looked ill and she could cure them.

Later she would diagnose the "illness" as caused by evil spirits or "dead meat put in their bodies by enemies."

One of her "cures," detectives said, involved getting the victim to rub his or her body with three tomatoes wrapped in $100 worth of $10 bills. She then took the "evil" tomatoes and money, investigators said, giving the victim some meat, with instructions to bury it in a graveyard at midnight.

Miss Yanis was arrested with the assistance of Tiedola Loera, 45, of Redlands, who said she paid $1,500 to be cleansed of evil spirits.

Woman entitled to unemployment

BOISE (UPI) — A Boise woman was entitled to unemployment compensation benefits although she was attending summer classes at Boise State University, the Idaho Supreme Court ruled today.

The State Department of Employment had turned down the claim of Marlene Smith, contending that she was not entitled to benefits for the weeks she was attending summer session classes at BSU.

The woman, who filed for benefits after she lost her job as a retail clerk at a Boise department store, appealed contending her classes were during the early morning hours, either from 7 to 9 a.m. or 7 to 9:20 a.m. She said these classes had not affected her availability for work because work as a retail clerk did not normally begin before 9:30 a.m. Her contention was upheld by the Industrial Commission, which found that she was available for work even though she had been taking these classes.

The commission said it was bound by an earlier decision of the Idaho Supreme Court holding a statute barring all students taking day classes from eligibility for unemployment compensation benefits to be unconstitutional.

African politics subject of novel

'The Barboza Credentials' by Peter Driscoll.

This is a novel that draws on contemporary political events in Africa.

There has been a long and bloody war for independence between the black nationalist guerrillas and the Portugueses in Mozambique, and bitter memories linger on.

Joe Hickey comes into this still-smoldering climate and is blackmailed into taking sides in the ongoing civil struggle. This is a superb adventure thriller with an ingenious plot that defies close guessing.

'How to Parent Alone: a Guide for Single Parents' by Joan Bel Godes.

This is not so much about raising children, though there are enlightening chapters on how to explain yourself to children and how to communicate with teenagers.

With this it is a book about parent care: how to increase your self-confidence, handle financial problems, conquer boredom, become decisive, get and hold a good job and combine it with parenthood, break harmful habits and replace them with new ones, overcome loneliness through a happy social life, and face the unknown future with eagerness instead of fear. 'The Plants' by Kenneth McKenney.

There are only two humans who seem to be able to communicate with the monstrous plants.

The large marrow squash grows overnight and continues to grow after picking. It seems to be an evil omen, lending to substantiate scientific evidence that the plant kingdom is on the rise. This is a compelling and superbly crafted tale of horror and high suspense.

'Memo From Gabriel' by Rosanne E. Nelson.

What do you do if you're a very inexperienced guardian angel and your first assignment is a middle-aged corporate wife who is dissatisfied with her husband and her life?

Even if you're a mere mortal, this collection of memos from the Archangel Gabriel to one of his more enthusiastic, but less competent, "helpers" will be both entertaining and enlightening.

It offers inspiration and Christian guidance for men and women as each memo deals with a different aspect of existence, from the deep gloom of loneliness to the peace and joy of commitment to Christ.

'Phony' perfume charges made

DENVER (UPI) — If you promised her anything but gave her Chanel, you better have another whiff of that perfume.

Chanel Inc., of New York, filed suit Tuesday against four businessmen accused of counterfeiting and distributing its product.

Chanel mentioned no specific damage amount in the lawsuit, filed in Denver District Court, but contended their reputation, good will and trademark had been damaged by the counterfeit sales.

The company also contended it lost money because of the distribution of the fake product.

The Denver firm of Western Job Lot Distributors last year handled perfume labeled as Chanel. The Denver district attorney's office discovered last January, however, the perfume was a close substitute but not a real Chanel product.

An investigation resulted in grand jury indictments against the four businessmen.

Defendants named were Mortimer Gordon, president of Western Job Lot Distributors, and Jack and Joseph Marcus, owners of J. Marcus Wholesalers, in Pittsburgh. The Marcus firm was accused of manufacturing the bogus perfume.

By Oswald & James Jacoby

"God bless us each and everyone," said Tiny Tim. I can count seven heart tricks plus six tricks for the aces and kings in the other suits. In honor of Christmas I'll let you play the hand partner so a very merry seven notrump to you and yours."

Old Scrooge, sitting South, beamed happily. How nice it was to be able to spend a merry Christmas with the Cratchit family and how nice it would be to top it off with a Christmas pudding grand slam.

West led a spade and as old Scrooge looked at dummy his happy expression disappeared. "My singleton king of spades faces your ace. We only have twelve tricks. What an unhappy experience."

Tiny Tim said cheerfully.
"Play out your cards. Maybe the ghost of Christmas past will produce a thirteenth trick for you anyway."

So Scrooge took dummy's ace of spades and ran off the seven hearts tricks. His five discards were three clubs and two diamonds. Meanwhile East wasn't enjoying Christmas at all. He had to come down to five cards, also, and was squeezed out of his protection in either clubs or diamonds. Scrooge had his thirteenth trick.

Mysterious noises part of all homes

BY ROBERT J. HERGUTHY
© Chicago Daily News

Every home, old or new, makes mysterious noises. Particularly in the dead of night when you're all alone in bed. I once knew a lady who laughed at the gaily sounds her dog made while it slept in the basement. Then the hound dog ran away, but the sounds continued. Here is a list of house noises, and what they signify, as compiled at the residence of Her Doktor Herguth, a scientist who has worked for years to make crabgrass stand up and walk right out of his yard. The pitter-patter of tiny feet on your roof: This means there are squirrels on the roof, or it is steeling, or your kids got hold of the ladder and are up there. A sound like a cricket in your basement: A cricket is in your basement. A loud thumping on the second floor: The kids have been told a million times not to jump off the beds onto the floor, but they never listen. A sound like a far-off machine gun in your plumbing: The toilet bowl is running again. A cliking, vibrating sound in your refrigerator: Two cans of beer are hitting each other when the fridge motor is on. A drip-drip-drip in the dark: Take the flashlight. Look in the phone book under "P" for plumbing. 24-hour variety. Then look for the leak. An unearthly sound from the attic: Go downstairs and count your kids. You'll find that you're one kid short.

Women's rights detailed

Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — Noting that women often are denied credit on the same terms that men are granted it, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has issued a pamphlet alerting women to their legal rights.

Under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which the FTC is empowered to enforce, women who feel they have been discriminated against have two options: filing a complaint with the FTC; bringing a court suit against the credit firms for actual damages suffered, and for punitive damages up to $10,000.

The act, the pamphlet advises, prohibits credit firms from discouraging women from applying for credit on the basis of sex or marital status. Additionally, credit firms are barred from refusing to grant separate accounts to credit-worthy female applicants and from requiring to open an account in a woman's maiden name.

The act also specifies that a woman applying for an unsecured separate account may not be asked her marital status, except in a community property state or where the information is required by state law governing permissible finance charges or loan ceilings.

The credit firm, however, must tell the applicant that she does not have to disclose her income from alimony or child support payments if she is not dependent upon that income in obtaining credit.

The act, which applies to banks, finance companies, department stores and credit card issuers, forbids them from using sex or marital status as factors in judging a woman's credit worthiness. Furthermore, marital status, unless there is evidence that the change will affect her ability to pay.

Medical staff doubled at St. Benedict's

Sunday, December 26, 1970 • Times-News, Twin Falls, Idaho 35

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

JEROME — New concepts in recruiting doctors to a small town have paid off at St. Benedict's Hospital in Jerome. Within the last few months, five new doctors have been added to the 40-bed hospital, according to Fred Maltz, public relations director. The facility also has a 40-bed long term care unit.

In addition, Dr. Robert R. Robertson has begun his practice in Wendell and is part of St. Benedict's medical staff. The Jerome facility, owned and operated by sisters of St. Benedict Order, Cottonwood, services both Lincoln County and Wendell, according to Maltz. He said this service area now has an estimated 30,000 population, including 6,500 in Jerome.

Why can Jerome be so successful in getting doctors when Buhl has needed additional medical personnel for some time? Maltz says the main factor is having the hospital and professional office facilities available. But he attributes part of the success to the total approach St. Benedict's makes toward recruiting.

Young doctors no longer want to be wined and dined when they visit a community to see if they would like to settle there, he said. Instead, Maltz says, they want to meet the people and learn about the community. "They want to know about the cultural aspects of the town which help create good family living," Maltz said.

They are interested in what kind of schools, churches and recreation facilities the community has. And contrary to the generally accepted materialistic standard of judging jobs mainly by what they pay, Maltz says money is not the prime factor.

"We don't try to sell them on coming here because of the money they can make," Maltz says. "They can make money anywhere and know it. What they are interested in is having modern facilities to work in and a place to build a good family life."

Another reason for Jerome doctors settling in younger, Maltz feels, is the trend toward small towns and a slower pace of life.

"They want to have time to be with their families as well as have cultural opportunities," Maltz said.

"We can also sell them on the idea they won't have to spend much time on administrative detail because we all work together," Maltz said. In some hospitals doctors have to do their own medical records, but such details are handled for them at St. Benedict's.

The doctors also are interested in the availability of x-ray, laboratory and pharmaceutical facilities at St. Benedict's, Maltz says. There are two radiologists, a physical therapist and an inhalation therapist.

Another plus in Jerome's favor when young doctors are deciding where to settle is that the long term care unit allows them to care for geriatric patients without "running all over town," Maltz said.

The tendency to look for quality of life more easily available in smaller towns dovetails with the trend back to family practice or the old fashioned "family doctor."

Years ago doctors were turned off by the long hours in general practice and turned toward specialties which forced them to congregate in urban areas.

But now with increasing numbers interested in family practice, rural communities with adequate facilities will increasingly benefit.

Idaho is still short of doctors statewide, Maltz said. The national patient-doctor ratio is 621 to one doctor, but in Idaho it is 1,000 to one.

Maltz said there are 280 family practice doctors in the state with an average age of 50 so it is estimated that 20 of them will retire within the next five years.

With all 44 community hospitals in Idaho vying for the same young doctors, recruitment has understandably become not just the responsibility of one public relations official, but the entire staff.

Maltz says in some communities doctors resent a newcomer, and he attributes much of his success to the fact that the entire St. Benedict's staff works together to make a potential new doctor feel welcome.

Instead of the wining and dining route, the visitor has breakfast with the hospital staff and gets to meet his future colleagues.

Maltz also assists with the many practical details necessary when a doctor moves to a community. He leaves nothing to chance.

It's one thing to get a new doctor to come, but the clincher is to get him to stay, Maltz said.

One reason he feels confident his new recruits will stay is because, thanks to his efforts, realtors have houses available, and financial arrangements already started when the new doctors arrived.

The difficulty, small Idaho communities have in obtaining doctors is compounded by the fact there is no medical school in Idaho.

But with the recruiting success of the last year, the Jerome facility apparently does not need to worry about the doctor shortage.

touted

BOISE (UPI) — The executive director of the Idaho Petroleum Council said Thursday there are three reasons for complying with the 55-mile per hour speed limit over the holidays: to save lives and money and to conserve on gasoline.

"Saving lives is vital, saving money is desirable, and using energy supplies more efficiently is essential," said Douglas E. Bean.

Bean said the National Safety Council estimates 9,000 lives a year have been saved on the nation's highways since the 55-mph-limit went into effect. He also cited Federal Energy Administration studies which show that by reducing speed from 70 to 55 miles per hour, most autos get 20 per cent more miles per gallon.

The FEA estimates the average motorist can save $157 a year by staying within the speed limit, he said.

"To meet the nation's needs, the U.S. is importing more than 40 per cent of its petroleum supplies," Bean said. "Every time we use an extra gallon of gasoline, our country becomes that much more dependent on foreign sources which can be cut off without notice."

"Bean said energy conservation holds 'the key' to the solution of many of the country's problems.

"For example, Americans are paying $35 billion this year for foreign oil," he said. "If we could reduce our foreign oil purchases, the money saved could be put to work in the U.S. economy, creating jobs and upgrading our country's productivity."

"All Americans can help stretch the available supplies by making every gallon of gasoline do as much work as possible," Bean said.

Glasses, contacts studied

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most teen-age girls believe boys who wear glasses should switch to contact lenses.

Their attitudes, implying a twist on "boys never make passes at girls who wear glasses," are revealed in a new survey of 1,300 girls ranging from 13 to 19 years old. They represent a balanced cross-section of girls from all parts of the country.

Of the total surveyed, 63.7 per cent wear some type of vision correction themselves — eyeglasses, soft or hard contact lenses. Of these, nearly half (48.9 per cent) wear contact lenses.

The study was funded by Bausch and Lomb, the company that first introduced soft contact lenses into the United States in 1971.

When the girls on the survey panel were questioned about boys and contacts, 77 per cent of the 1,300 teenagers said they believe boys need contact lenses just as much as girls do.

The contact lens wearers felt stronger about the question than those with eyeglasses. Ninety-two per cent of those with soft contact lenses and 86 per cent of the hard contact wearers "felt" boys should switch to contacts.

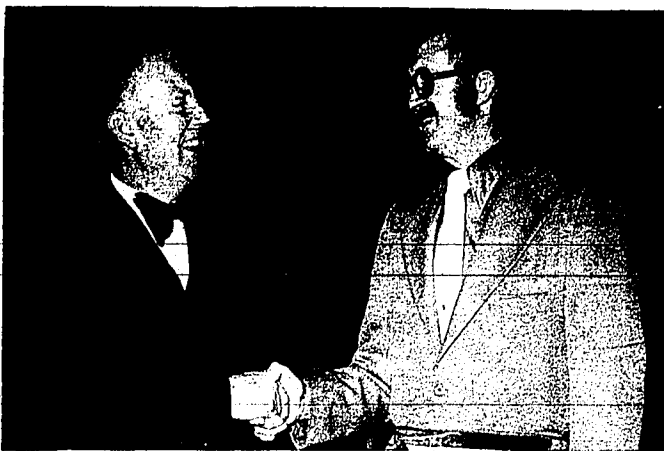

When asked if the boys prefer girls with contact lenses, they were less enthusiastic. Of the 1,300, 38 per cent agreed; 30.6 per cent were neutral; and 30.4 per cent disagreed.

However, percentages vary among girls who wear contacts. Almost half (47 per cent) said boys prefer girls with contact lenses; 33 per cent are neutral; and 20 per cent disagreed.

The girls rated contact lenses as desirable for two reasons: to improve appearance (66.5 per cent) and to eliminate the inconvenience or bother of wearing eyeglasses (79.1 per cent).

However, contact lenses do not mean the end of eyeglasses for girls in the survey panel. Of the contact lens wearers, 57.8 per cent also wear glasses some of the time. More hard lens wearers (60.8 per cent) wear glasses occasionally than soft contact lens wearers (42.6 per cent).

Events that involve boys rate the "highest" for using contact lenses. The girls voted for the following activities for wearing contact lenses: school, 86 per cent; social events for girls and boys, 85 per cent; movies, concerts and plays, 81 per cent; and outdoor sports, 57 per cent. Social activities with girls rated only 31 per cent.

Toile painting's popularity grows

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Have you ever seen one of those dark, stained wooden wall plaques with painted grapes that look so real you want to pluck one off and pop it into your mouth?

Such plaques are examples of toile painting, one of many crafts growing dramatically in popularity in the United States. You may not think you have the talent to do it, but Gerry Klein says all you have to do is follow instructions, one step at a time.

"A lot of people are interested in these crafts, but they're afraid to try," said Mrs. Klein, who began painting nine years ago and now owns her own crafts shop and shares her love of art with scores of students.

"They think they're just for people with a lot of talent, but the things we do don't take any special talent at all. They're all done according to a system, step-by-step."

Toile painting is based on method, not artistic ability, she said. With a proper stroke, a minimum amount of paint on the brush and careful wiping of the brush between each stroke, the proper effect can be achieved.

The object of toile painting, Mrs. Klein said, is a smooth picture that appears to have no brush strokes at all. Unlike some other types of painted pictures, a toile painting should look as good close up as it does from a distance.

Technically, toileware is tin, but toile painting is done on many surfaces, so it is often termed toile and decorative painting to more accurately describe its wide range of forms. Its popularity in the United States began in the mid-18th century, with folk art evolving into sophisticated designs.

An increasingly industrialized society pushed such painstaking art into the background, but its beauty and simplicity have made it popular once more. All age groups enjoy toile painting, from widows with time on their hands to young adults who want to give gifts that show more imagination and personal attention than money.

Mrs. Klein, 38, didn't know anything about art when she first started. "If someone had asked me what I could do," she said in an interview, "I would have said, scrub floors and wash diapers, because that's all I had ever done."

"But once I got started, I gained confidence. It gives you the courage to go on and do other things."

One of the things she has done is open her own business. The Idea Shop, it's a storefront studio marked with a bright yellow awning on the city's south side where Mrs. Klein is surrounded with the materials and the students of the art she loves.

She talked of toile painting as she wandered among half a dozen students involved in different projects.

Translation blamed for hassle

TAIPEI (UPI) — The "sexist statement" blamed on Confucius by women's rights advocates was actually caused by poor English translation, a defender of the ancient Chinese sage said today.

"The translation caused the misunderstanding," said Prof.

Hsiao Chi-issung, a Chinese literature teacher for more than 20 years.

The controversial English translation — "Men Have Their Respective Occupations and Women Their Homes" — was part of the ephigraph which accompanied a 4-foot Confucius statue Taiwan presented to Houston as a Bicentennial gift. That quotation from Confucius has been attacked by many women's rights advocates, including Dr. Nikki van Hightower, of Houston.

Burley sites eyed

BURLEY — Burley City Council members Tuesday visited alternative sites for a new water department building.

They decided to build an addition at the present location of the department, rather than construct a new building at the city services center.

The facility is part of the $2 million water system improvement project now being implemented by the city.

The council chose the site because the central control plant for the water system will be located in the new structure and the city services center is far from most city growth.

Councilman Leonard King proposed a clear-span metal building that would cover the present office with its laboratory facilities, and add the additional space needed for office, equipment and water controls.

"Al Hodge, water superintendent, told the council Monday night that either the present site or the services center would be satisfactory.

Bill Block, of J-U-B Engineers, Twin Falls, said the cost would be about the same at either location. Hodge agreed, but added that most of the city's growth is to the east, north and south, not toward the west, where the services center is.

Mayor Chuck Shaddock supported the present department site because it is centrally located and is less expensive than a new building.

Councilman Garth Payne suggested it might be cheapest to construct a new facility "while we've got the dollars to do it." Councilman James Henderson asked whether or not it might be better in the future to have all the city services at one location.

After Tuesday's tour, however, the council instructed J-U-B to develop plans for construction at the present site.

Richard J. Daley, man of many faces

BY MIKE ROYKO
Chicago Daily News

If a man ever reflected a city, it was Richard J. Daley and Chicago.

In some ways, he was this town at its best—strong, hard-driving, working feverishly, pushing, building, driven by ambitions so big they seemed Texas-boastful.

In other ways, he was this city at its worst—arrogant, crude, conniving, ruthless, suspicious, intolerant.

He wasn't graceful, suave, witty or smooth. But, then, this is not Paris or San Francisco.

He was raucous, sentimental, hot-tempered, practical, simple, devious, big and powerful. This is, after all, Chicago.

Sometimes the very same Daley performance would be seen as both outrageous and heroic. It depended on whom you asked for an opinion.

For example, when he stood on the convention floor in 1968 and mouthed furious crudities at smooth Abe Ribicoff, tens of millions of TV viewers were shocked.

But it didn't offend most Chicagoans. That's part of the Chicago style—bally to belly, scowl to scowl, and may the loudest or loudest man win.

Daley was not an articulate man, most English teachers would agree. Perhaps, for other parts of the country sometimes marveled that a politician who fractured the language so thoroughly could be taken so seriously.

Well, Chicago is not an articulate town, Saul Bellow notwithstanding. Maybe it's because so many of us aren't that far removed from parents and grandparents who knew only bits and pieces of the language.

So when Daley slid sideways into a sentence, or didn't exit from the same paragraph he entered, it amused us. But it didn't sound that different from the way most of us talk.

Besides, he got his point across, one way or another, and usually in Chicago style. When he thought critics should mind their own business about the way he handed out insurance business to his sons, he tried to think of a way to say they should kiss his bottom. He found a way. He said it. We understood it. What more can one ask of language?

Daley was a product of the neighborhoods and he reflected it in many good ways—loyalty to the family, neighbors, old buddies, the corner grocer. You do something for someone, they do something for you. If somebody is sick, you offer the family help. If somebody dies, you go to the wake and try to lend comfort. The young don't lip off to the old, everybody cuts grass, takes care of his property, and doesn't play his TV too loudly.

That's the way he liked to live, and that's what he thought most people wanted, and he was right.

Power lawsuit dropped

TWIN FALLS — Idaho Power Co. and two other utilities have dropped a lawsuit to overturn Wyoming State pollution control standards, according to industry and state officials.

The power companies also have agreed to a compliance schedule to install "scrubbers" to remove sulfur dioxide pollution from the emissions of the Jim Bridger coal-fired power plant, which Idaho Power shares jointly with Pacific Power and Light, and another Wyoming plant, United Press International reported.

The scrubbers for the plants will cost in excess of $350 million, Bob Moench, PP & L Wyoming manager told the news service.

However, Idaho Power news director Robert Brown could give no estimate to the Times-

But there are other sides to Chicago neighborhoods—suspicion of outsiders, intolerance toward the unconventional, bigotry and bullying.

That was Daley, too. As he proved over and over again, he didn't trust outsiders, whether they were longhairs, against war, black preachers against segregation, reformers against his Machine, or community groups against his policies. This was his neighborhood-ward-city-county, and nobody could come in and make noise. He'd call the cops. Which he did.

There are those who believed Daley had been forgiven by the city to statehood, had he embraced the idealistic causes of the 1960s, rather than obstructing them. Had he used his unique power to lead us toward brotherhood and understanding, they say, he would have achieved greatness.

Sure he would have. But to have expected that response from Daley was as realistic as asking Crutin, Bridgeport, Marquette Park or any other Chicago neighborhood to celebrate Brotherhood Week by having ex-Blackstone Ranger leader Jeff Fort to dinner. If Daley was reactionary and stubborn, he was in perfect harmony with his town.

Daley was a pious man—faithful to his church, a believer in the 4th of July, apple pie, motherhood, baseball, the Boy Scouts, the flag, sitting down to dinner with the family, and deeply offended by public displays of immorality.

And, for all the swinging new lifestyles, that is still basically Chicago. Maybe New York will tell you that. But Chicago is still a square town. So City Hall made sure our carnal vices were kept to a public minimum. If old laws didn't work, they got new laws that did.

On the other hand, there are financial vices. And if somebody in City Hall saw a chance to make a fast bundle or two, Daley wasn't given to preaching. His advice amounted to "don't get caught."

But that's Chicago, too. The question has never been how you made it, but if you made it. This town was built by great men who demanded that drunkards and harlots be arrested, while charging them rent until the cops arrived.

If Daley sometimes abused his power, it didn't offend most Chicagoans. The people who came here in Daley's lifetime were accustomed to someone wielding power like a club, be it a czar, emperor, king or rural sheriff. The realities of the democratic process weren't part of the immigrant experience. So if the Machine muscle offended some, it seemed like old times to many more.

Eventually Daley made the remarkable transition from political boss to father figure.

LARRY TOMMERUP, 15, a sophomore in Twin Falls High School, will be installed Dec. 29 as Master Councillor of the Order of the DeMolay, a Masonic organization for boys between the ages of 13 and 21. The installation ceremony will be held at the Twin Falls Masonic Temple and is open to the public.

Recreation club proposed

TWIN FALLS — A proposed hand ball and racquet ball court on Pole Line Road just east of Blue Lakes Boulevard will have to be set back 100 feet from the centerline of the roadway, county zoning review board members said Tuesday.

The review board, comprised of members of the Planning and Zoning Board and the county commissioners met to discuss and inspect property owned by Gene Huggins and proposed as a site for a hand ball and racquet ball club.

Members of the review group took into consideration the proposed Twin Falls Belt Route which would follow Pole Line Road in this area. If and when a belt route is developed, widening of the road would be necessary.

Huggins has applied for a conditional use permit on the front portion of a 10-acre piece of property he owns on Pole Line Road. His home is located on the canyon rim at the rear of the property.

Board members said this is now an agriculture zone and a number of homes border the proposed hand ball club site. It was suggested the developer also provide a fence or other screening, but no stipulations were made.

Adequate, lighted parking space will be provided behind the building and the developer has already made plans for this. Ed Woods, zoning administrator, said Huggins proposes a 40 by 80 foot building to include hand ball and racquet ball courts, a sauna, shower and dressing rooms and locker areas. Woods said membership in the club would be restricted to 150.

Other zoning requests reviewed Tuesday included a plan by Jim Bremner to remove a potato storage building at Curry and construct a grain storage struc-

Monday for Idahoans

SEATTLE — The U.S. Department of Labor's Wage-Hour division is holding $1.15 for 17 individuals whose last known addresses were in the state of Idaho.

The money, according to Loren E. Gilbert, wage-hour assistant administrator, represents back wages owed the individuals in minimum wage and overtime cases relating to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The department recovered the back wages, according to Gilbert, and was then unable to reach the individuals to make payment.

The money can only be held by the department for three years from the date of recovery.

The individuals whose last known addresses were in the Magic Valley were: Renate Bassett and Mary Martinez, DUNIT, KATIE and Nancy Daley, Filer; and Nathan Howard, Twin Falls.

Blaine prosecutor resigns

HAILEY — Blaine County Prosecuting Attorney Tom Campton resigned from office allowing newly elected prosecutor Maurice Ellsworth to take over the position three weeks earlier than was officially expected.

Ellsworth began Monday as Blaine County prosecutor establishing a new office in Hailey. He was officially expected to begin his two year term in the office on Jan. 10.

Campton said the reason for his resignation was simply to allow Ellsworth a chance to grow accustomed to the office in a period which is traditionally slow for the prosecutor in terms of the number of cases handed in court.

"I resigned early in order to give him a chance to grow accustomed to the workings of the office in what is traditionally a quiet period in the prosecutor's office, that is during the Christmas holiday," Campton said.

"Christmas and New Year's week is usually pretty slow in terms of work in this office because judges don't like to try cases before the holidays," Campton said, "but there are plenty of arrests and then there are plenty of trials in the beginning of January."

"When I took over in January two years ago," he added, "I found it was intensely busy and I didn't have any time to get started and adjusted in the office. I hope he will have a chance to get started now."

Ellsworth, who was elected to be the new prosecutor in November's general election, said he originally anticipated taking office in January but that he realized his early appointment might serve as a kind of "breather period."

Idaho will get funding

SEATTLE — Prime sponsors of Comprehensive Employment and Training (CETA) workers in the northwest will share $47.7 million of which Idaho's share is $3.8 million.

Theda Gerdes, CETA program worker at the Twin Falls Department of Employment, says the money will mean eight new CETA VI positions in the Twin Falls area.

CETA II and CETA VI money is administered by the employment office to help develop jobs with the approval of the Twin Falls County commissioners, according to Gerdes.

"We expect additional funding for Title VI after the first of the year," Gerdes says. "But that is something you never know."

She says the program had positions for 31 CETA workers during the past fiscal year. There will be eight new positions for CETA II workers, too.

"The money to be received locally is part of a $1.36 billion grant to the CETA program nationwide. The state of Washington will receive $23.2 million, Oregon will receive $17.6 million and Alaska will receive $3.1 million to fund CETA VI workers.

The money means 260,000 CETA VI positions will be continued until September, 1977, in addition to the 50,000 CETA II positions already funded nationwide.

The jobs are in community, agencies such as schools, hospitals, libraries, parks and recreation centers, public works, police departments, fire departments and government sponsored programs such as Head Start.

How to water your plants

By GEORGE ABRAHAM SOIL MOISTURE METERS

How good are those soil moisture meters for telling you whether your plants need water or not?

They're great for amateurs who have a hard time telling if their plants need watering or not.

We've tried three different kinds and find them to be precision instruments which give very accurate meter readings and tell you at a glance if your soil is dry or wet.

Trained growers can tell how much water to give a plant, and when. But it's not so easy for amateurs, especially with the advent to metal containers and plastic pots.

Clay pots dry by evaporation in a uniform matter. With plastic pots, evaporation is slow since only the surface area is exposed, while the pot, resting, evaporation from the side. So, the soil surface can feel the top, you get a wrong reading — dry — and dump water on the plant. This can result in overwatering (wet feet) and the plants can suffer.

One meter we like is the Aqua-Kane which gives a fast reading, as soon as you push the end into the soil. A blue flag means soil is saturated, no more water needed. Orange means the plant is dry, add water.

The Kane is useful for checking water around large shrubs, trees, lawns and small flowers. Another meter we like tests light as well as soil moisture.

We used to frown upon these things as gadgets, but after working with them, we can see how they can be a big help to plant lovers who have a reputation for killing their plants with too much or not enough water.

PEANUT BUTTER AND BIRDS

Recently, we stated that the ornithology laboratory at Cornell University could find no evidence to show that peanut butter is harmful to birds. Several bird lovers swooped down on us, contradicting the peanut butter theory.

One reader quoted Martin's book, "Hand-taming Wild Birds at the Feeder."

It stated: "Peanut butter and avocados are fine for us, but can also be very harmful to birds."

One killed a very fine bird by giving him a piece of avocado because he asked for it. Squirrels fed on raw peanuts keep in fine condition, but cooked peanuts will make them bloaty and sluggish, and their fur loses its gloss.

When a seed-eating bird feeds entirely on peanut butter, he loses the gravel from his gizzard, and it does not function normally. It shrinks and his liver becomes enlarged and the bird is soon very ill or dead."

Some chickadees die soon after eating their first meal of peanut butter. When they have eaten all they can hold, they regurgitate their little mouths full of it and carry it away.

When they try to deposit the butter in a hiding place, it sticks to the roof of their mouths; in the struggle to dislodge it, the butter is packed tighter and the birds choke to death.

"If a female chickadee eats a lot of peanut butter up to the time she is ready to lay her first egg, she is very apt to die of egg-binding."

There! We've presented both sides of the peanut butter controversy.

HOME GREENHOUSE

If you're looking for ways to cut down on the fuel bill in your home greenhouse, try using the plastic "air cap" material, such as used for wrapping and packaging.

It's sold commercially for greenhouse use and has great value for saving fuel. Those who have used it have reported it has not stuck to the greenhouse glass. The cause seems to be dirty glass or not enough water.

Wash the glass with detergent before applying and use a hose

Instead of a sprayer to wet the glass. It's put on the inside of the glass house.

WINTERIZING EVERGREENS

We'd like to remind you again to not allow newly planted evergreens to go into the winter with a dry soil. Give them a good soaking and mulch with bark, chips or sawdust, or whatever is your favored material. Also you can apply an anti-desiccant spray, put on any time when the day temperature is above 40 degrees.

These anti-wilting sprays are an organic latex coating which protects the leaves from losing moisture due to sun's rays and drying winds. You can find these in any garden store and sold under various brand names such as Wilt-Out, Plant Shield, etc.

THE STUBBORN WAX PLANT

Why doesn't the wax plant (parlor plant, or hoyo) bloom more readily? The answer to this is not simple, although it's agreed that the hoye will not bloom until it reaches a certain age and size.

The plant needs to grow a certain amount of leaf area before it can make enough hormones and carbohydrates to form flower buds. The plant also needs bright light for flower production. Ours are in a sunny room where the plants get bright light.

In a green house the hoyo flowers easily because of the extra sunlight. Wax plants like a well-drained, humusy soil (peat-moss, vermiculite, perlite, plus loam) all at the rate of one part each by volume.

Wet feet will kill the plant, so make sure you don't overwater. Hoyas like to be somewhat potbound for best growth. Grown in too large a pot, you get lots of leaves, no buds or flowers.

If repotting is needed, do the job in February or March. Start new plants from stem cuttings inserted in perlite or vermiculite.

If you're lucky enough to get a blossom, do not remove it because the spurlike structures from which these are borne will bloom again each year.

Mealybugs are the plant's worst pest. Handpick each mass, and also look for scale insects. Use a cotton swab on toothpick dipped in alcohol to control them.

QUESTION BOX

QUESTION OF THE WEEK: D. F. Deelo: "I received a Norfolk Island pine and do not know what care it needs. Please tell us how to care for it."

This evergreen tree is a native to the Norfolk Islands (2,000 miles southwest of Hawaii). Also called New Caledonia pine, this one is used as a Christmas tree indoors and makes a fine tubed plant. Correct botanical name is Araucaria heterophylla. In case you want to look it up.

Indoors it likes bright light, but not direct sun. It will tolerate a temperature range of 60 to 75 degrees.

Remember, it's a tropical plant, so don't let it get below 40 degrees. Soil should be moderately moist, never too dry or too soggy.

It's not a heavy feeder. Feed every two months with any water-soluble plant food, never a dry fertilizer. Some growers like to syringe or sponge the leaves every two or three weeks to improve the plant's appearance.

Norfolk Island pine will get scale insects and scale. If leaves turn yellow, check for spider mites. Washing the leaves in soap and water will keep the mite population down.

Scale insects, usually found in the axils of leaves, can be kept in check by using a cotton swab dipped in alcohol. Don't get any on the leaves.

Araucaria can be grown from seeds or cuttings. Cuttings make the best pot plants. Those grown from seeds have longer stem space between the branches than do plants raised from cuttings.

It's not a bomb shelter — a real plush place to have fun

By CHRISTOPHER BOGAN
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — When some 200 people squeeze sardine style into a dimly-lit, large underground room on a Saturday night, it's not because they're worried about a bomb scare.

Rather, they're looking for a good time.

Last week a lot of people found one when the new Elkhorn Village Inn opened. The $6.5 million hotel was unveiled with, among other things, two new restaurants and a new saloon.

The best opening Saturday night was underground, at the new old Western-style bar, called The Saloon. Hundreds of people showed up to have a few drinks, listen to the music and check the place out.

At 4:30 p.m. Saturday afternoon, it seemed hard to believe the new saloon would open. Downstairs, in the bar beneath the new hotel's convention hall, people were madly scurrying around. In the dim light one saw an essentially empty room with a long stand-up bar running along the back wall and a small platform stage against the front wall.

There was a cluster of amplifiers, speakers and instruments on the stage. To the left and right of it were stacked chairs and tables. The main saloon floor was covered with a soft cushioned underlayment for a carpet. The brand new saloon carpet was still rolled up against a wall and wrapped in tough, brown packaging paper. In 3½ hours the place was supposed to open.

"And, believe it or not, it did. At 8 p.m., as if by wizardry, the carpet was down, the stage set up, and the tables and chairs neatly placed about the room."

People began trickling in. The opening of the new $6.5 million hotel was announced earlier in articles and ads in every paper that reaches the area.

By 9 p.m. it was getting crowded. People bunched along the stand-up bar. Their feet sunk into the soft, newly laid, dark red carpet as they stood and sipped their drinks.

The same dim light still poured into the saloon from low wattage light bulbs wired into old fashioned kerosene lanterns hanging from the ceiling. People clustered around the small, round, aluminum-topped tables with thin black necks and black bases. Many tables were scattered across the main saloon floor, all occupied. It became harder and harder to find one of the bare thin black framed chairs with brown upholstered seats to sit on.

Two men performed on stage, playing acoustic guitars and singing songs.

By 10 p.m. the bar was packed. The dark red carpet had its first beer stains. The first litter of wet glass-ringed cocktail napkins and shreds of soggy beer bottle labels lay under tables and beside chairs. By 11 p.m., about 20 people waited on the stairway to get into the bar. One of the Saloon's attendants let them trickle in, a few at a time, as others left for home. Waitresses, dressed in soft orange-colored shirts and brownish white mid-skirts with $70 Frye pioneer-style boots on, zipped from table to table taking orders and delivering drinks.

Between 11 and 12 p.m. a New York City group called Diane Scanlon and The Band made a sneak appearance. Their official engagement in

The Saloon wasn't to begin until Monday. And Diane Scanlon was not with the group "Saturday night. It was just The Band and they said they'd been on the road for 60 hours from New York to Sun Valley and were just going to "jam" a little bit.

There were four men in the group. One sat in the back behind a set of drums. Another, the band's spokesman, picked up a Fender bass guitar. A third sat down at an electric piano and the fourth, standing next to some congas, picked up a tenor saxophone in his hands.

Suddenly they were done chatting and adjusting their instruments, and they were playing.

They started slow and easy. People rose from their chairs and moved out to the dance floor. The music looked over.

The band picked up momentum. They were playing hard and fast. The piano player was furiously chinking away at his keyboard. The drummer was pounding away, and the base player keeps plunking the strings of his guitar, providing the backbone and skeleton for the music. Without his steady thumping in the background everything would collapse into a formless jello of sounds.

The dancers came alive to the rhythms of the music. The place was crowded all night and alive with the buzz of voices talking at tables over drinks.

At midnight, when the band finished its brief set, only a few people went home. Joe Cannon and Jeff Pearson, the two acoustic guitar players who performed before, came back on stage.

With their two 12 string acoustic guitars rigged up with electric pickups, and plugged in they launched into a fast non-stop series of songs. People didn't leave the dance floor, even though the songs were rendered in a jazzed up folk style and my carried with them the twangy power of 24 steel strings amplified by two small pickups plugged into speakers. The two performers began with an old Bob Dylan song and then followed it with an old Rolling Stones tune. The people loved it. Everybody in the place recognized the tunes as they came one after another. More people stepped onto the dance floor, and they were all rocking and reeling and stomping—and clapping—and swaying and swirling and having a fine time.

Cannon and Pearson launched into "Leroy Brown."

Kimberly students will visit Mexico

KIMBERLY — Kimberly High School officials are planning two trips for students to Mexico in July next year.

Vivian Rendle, school librarian, and Mrs. Barbara Crouch, school guidance counselor, plan to travel to Mexico City, Taxco and Acapulco with about 12 students.

Miss Rendle said Tuesday her group of about six will leave July 10 and stay in Mexico until Aug. 6. Mrs. Crouch's group will tour Mexico from July 16 to July 30, Miss Rendle said.

Student members of the International Club, a club recently formed at the high school, are busy planning cake sales, popcorn ball sales and movies to raise money for the trip.

Miss Rendle said each student in her group will pay about $900 for the tour, including a charter flight to Mexico, and $75 for transportation to and from Denver where the charter leaves from. The cost per student in Mrs. Crouch's group will be $550 per student for the charter and $75 for transportation to and from Denver, Miss Rendle said.

Miss Rendle said the student club will try to raise enough money to cover transportation cost to and from Denver. The rest of the money will have to be provided by the travelers or their parents.

Both traveling groups will tour "The City of Rocks," a combination of Mayan and Aztec architecture; see bullfights; and watch divers jump off 125-foot cliffs in Acapulco.

The club will show the film, "Wait Until Dark," on the last day of school before Christmas vacation to raise money for the trip.

Cindy Davis, Twin Falls, Diane Humphreys and John Arrington, both Kimberly, have already signed up to travel with Miss Rendle. Linda Hulse, Kimberly, has already signed up to travel with Mrs. Crouch.

The trips are open to students from other high schools, Mrs. Rendle said. For more information, call 423-5313.

Consumer pork supplies to increase during 1977

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Agriculture Department economists Wednesday released a hog production survey confirming earlier forecasts that consumer pork supplies will be up next year, with retail pork prices running 5 cents a pound or more below this year's average.

The hog survey report did not contain any price forecasts. But its forecasts of hog production and prospective supplies were about the same as those used earlier by economists in predicting lower average consumer prices in 1977.

The report said production of baby pigs during the June-November, 1976 season — which will make up the consumer pork supply for the first half of 1977 — is estimated at 42.2 million head, up 18 percent from last year and 9 percent from two years ago.

The survey also showed that the upswing in pork supplies will continue later in 1977, but at a sharply scaled down rate because farmers are slowing down their expansion in the wake of recent low hog prices.

According to the report, production of baby pigs in the season running from December, 1976 through May, 1977 may be about 44.3 million head, up 5 percent from a year earlier. These pigs will furnish the nation's pork supply through the second half of 1977.

Officials said the total number of hogs and pigs on American farms as of Dec. 1 was estimated at 55.1 million head, up 11 percent from a year earlier but only slightly above two years ago.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Farmers facing a mounting surplus of wheat after record harvests in 1976 and 1975 have cut plantings of 1977 winter wheat by 3 percent and the crop may fall 8 percent below this year's level, the Agriculture Department reported Wednesday.

The government's first report on 1977 winter wheat prospects warned that moisture supplies in the Great Plains, which produces most of the winter wheat crop, were low.

It said that as of early December, the crop was in "only fair condition" because of low temperatures, lack of moisture, and a lack of snow cover which left the crop vulnerable to wind erosion and freeze damage.

The prospective cutback in production, however, did not threaten any wheat shortage for consumers. Depending on future weather conditions, the 1977 crop could be close to needs and, in any case, users will be able to draw on a heavy reserve piled up by the last two crops.

The department's Crop Reporting Board said a Dec. 1 survey showed that producers, perhaps influenced in some areas by low prices this year, have planted 53,815,000 acres of winter wheat for harvest next year. This is down 3 percent from the 57,708,000 acres planted for this year's harvest.

Experts said per acre yields on the basis of Dec. 1 conditions were estimated at 25.8 bushels an acre, down from last season's 27.1 bushels because of poor growing conditions so far.

If yields hold at the indicated level, the report said, the crop would reach 1.438 billion bushels compared with the 1976 harvest of 1.566 billion bushels and the 1975 record crop of 1.653 billion bushels.

The report said the downturn in acreage halted a trend of steadily increasing winter wheat plantings over the past six years.

Winter wheat production normally accounts for about three quarters of total U.S. wheat production. The rest is made up of spring wheat which will not be planted until next spring.

One basis for comparison of the 1.438 billion bushel winter wheat forecast, which will be supplemented later by 1977 spring wheat, is the amount of the grain being used in the current 1976-77 marketing season. Government experts currently expect use to reach 1.795 billion bushels of both types of wheat combined — 795 million bushels for American consumers and 1 billion for export.

The new wheat report said farmers in Kansas, the leading winter wheat state, increased plantings 2 percent this year. Acreage was also up in North Dakota, but there were declines in all other western states including a 20 percent reduction in Iowa and a 12 percent cut in Illinois.

Acreage was down in all western states. In the southern states, Oklahoma plantings were unchanged, but there were cuts in Texas, Kentucky and Tennessee.

In 1975, the total wheat crop reached a record of 2.135 billion bushels including the record 1.653 billion bushels of winter wheat. This year, winter wheat production slipped to 1.566 billion bushels, but spring wheat output jumped to a record 581.3 million — enough to push the overall total to a record 2.147 billion bushels.

No forecasts of 1977 spring wheat production have been made, but experts earlier had said acreage might be held close to 1976 levels if weather conditions next spring encourage planting.

One expert, noting that the 1976 crop was planted amid moisture fears but turned out bigger than predicted in a December, 1975 estimate, said moisture conditions in most of the grain belt currently are "worse than a year ago."

Economists, meanwhile, currently are predicting that reserve stocks of wheat on hand next spring — just before the 1977 crop begins reaching the market — will reach about 1.018 billion bushels, the biggest stock since the early 1960's. This compares with 664 million bushels on hand last spring.

The U.S. stockpile is rising because mammoth crops here and in other regions, including the Soviet Union, pushed 1976 global wheat production to a new record.

Wednesday's crop report also estimated that farmers planted 2.9 million acres of rye for 1977 harvest, down 1 percent from 1976 to the lowest figure on record.

BLM considering cutdown in wild horse population

CHEYENNE (UPI) — The Bureau of Land Management confirmed today it is considering further reduction in the state's wild horse population, currently totaling about 8,000.

The BLM said the reduction is being considered because ranchers have complained that the wild horse herds are competing with cattle for forage.

The federal agency has already been involved in operations to reduce the wild horse population Wyoming through its "adopt a horse" program, operating primarily in the south central and southwestern parts of the state.

Wild horses are protected under provisions of the Federal Wild, Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act of 1971. The horse "adoption" is carried out under provisions of the act.

The BLM declined to say where the proposed additional thinning activity would take place. The majority of the state's wild horse population is located in the Rock Springs, Rawlins area, with a smaller concentration in the Worland area, the BLM said.

The agency also said it had not established the number of horses it would like to thin from the free roaming herds.

A spokesman for the federal agency said the wild horse population in Wyoming increased by about 20 percent this year.

Recommendations about whether to further reduce the wild horse population in the state are expected to be released next month. The recommendation will be included in a package of recommendations concerning future land use management for coal leasing lands under BLM jurisdiction in several areas of the state. The BLM is making the recommendations as the first step toward an environmental impact statement on the proposed development of the areas.

Cane crop threatened

KINGSTON, Jamaica (UPI) — A devastating sugar cane disease has jumped across the Atlantic Ocean from Guyana into the Caribbean and could destroy crops in Cuba as well as in the United States, according to Jamaican scientists.

The Jamaican Sugar Research Institute said the so-called sugar cane smut disease was discovered in Jamaica a few weeks ago and could easily spread 90 miles north to Cuba, the world's largest sugar producer and on to the United States.

The Jamaican scientists said the plague reached Jamaica from West Africa by wind and the institute's field director, Michael Shaw, predicted millions of dollars damage to the Jamaican sugar industry over the next few years.

Shaw said the disease has also affected crops in Guyana, Trinidad and Martinique.

Compact on river sets meet

LOGAN, Utah (UPI) — Bear River Commission Chairman Wally Johnson says the study committee reviewing proposed amendments to the Bear River Compact will meet in early January, most likely in Salt Lake City.

Jipson said two delegates from Idaho, Utah and Wyoming, plus a Utah-Power & Light Co. official will attend the meeting to modify amendments to the 18-year-old compact. The amended compact, already approved by governors of the three states, would increase state water rights from the drainage and provide additional upstream reservoir storage on the Bear River and its tributaries.

The chairman said the committee will consider changes to two portions of the amended compact — the first dealing with UP&L's existing power rights, and the second with setting a minimum level for Bear Lake.

Once the modifications are made, the amended compact will go back to the full commission for its approval, and then on to the state legislatures. The recommended modifications resulted from public hearings last month in each of the three states.

Idaho wheat shows drop

BOISE (UPI) — Acreage of winter wheat seedlings in Idaho was down six percent from last year and it is forecast for an eight percent reduction next year.

The Idaho Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Wednesday soil moisture was below normal in all dryland areas of the state at seeding time.

Continued lack of precipitation was concerning most producers, the agency said.

Most of the crop had little growth when cold weather set in, the service reported.

Sugar duty may be reimposed

By BERNARD BRENNER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Government trade officials are reviewing a proposal to take sugar off the list of commodities which some developing nations can ship to the United States duty-free, but there is no certainty a decision will be made quickly, an official says.

The proposal comes from the American Farm Bureau Federation, which says it could help American sugar growers who have seen their prices pushed below production-cost levels in recent months.

Allan Grant, Farm Bureau president, estimated in a letter to the White House Office of Special Trade Representatives recently that about 20 per cent of this year's sugar imports are coming duty-free from developing countries under a "trade preference" plan which took effect last January.

Farm Bureau officials said they felt the duty-free imports were "one of several factors leading to the current low-price problem facing U.S. cane and beet sugar producers."

Ambassador Clayton Yettler, deputy Special Trade Representative, said government trade officials yesterday concluded five days of hearings on proposals to revise the "trade preference" commodity list for 1977 by adding or deleting commodities.

After reviewing testimony on a long list of commodities at the hearing, Yettler added in an interview, an interagency committee could reach a decision on the sugar issue by early in the new year.

But there's no certainty a decision will be made that quickly, Yettler said, because officials might prefer to mark time until the incoming Carter administration could look at the issue after Jan. 20.

In addition, Yettler said, another development could persuade officials to delay a decision. The International Trade Commission currently is reviewing the sugar economy in an effort to decide whether American producers are being damaged by the current import level, and whether some remedial steps should be taken.

Yettler pointed out that if the government takes any of several steps affecting sugar which could result from the Trade Commission study, current law would also automatically take the product off the duty-free list for developing countries.

Agriculture Department officials, meanwhile, have estimated total sugar imports this year will total between 4.3 million and 4.6 million tons — about 40 per cent of American consumption.

The duty-free shipping provision exempts developing nations from a duty which earlier was 6 cents a pound but was raised to 1.8 cents by President Ford last fall. The exemption is available, however, only to countries which did not ship more than $25 million worth of the commodity involved to the United States in the preceding year.

Officials said only Guatemala among the five leading 1976 foreign suppliers of American sugar was able to use the duty-free provision this year, and they said the Central American nation's shipments of 210,000 tons in the first nine months of the year probably will shut it out of the duty-free class for 1977.

Guatemala, as a result, would not be affected in 1977 if sugar were taken off the preference list.

But a number of smaller exporters and one major producer, Brazil, might be affected. Officials said Brazil shipped virtually no sugar to the United States this year because of a drought, but may send from 500,000 to 1 million tons in 1977 and "may qualify" for duty-free treatment beginning next March 1.

Change coming

TRANSITION matters are discussed by Rep. Bob Bergland, D-Minn., left, who will become agriculture secretary in the Carter administration, and John Knebel, right, who is currently acting secretary of agriculture. (UPI)

Production lid unlikely in new secretary's view

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Agriculture Secretary-designate Rep. Bob Bergland doesn't believe farm production controls will be needed during the next few years even though wheat stocks are building to an expected 1 billion bushel level next summer.

"I really ought not to speculate, but personally I would rather believe that we wouldn't need (production controls)," Bergland said in an interview late Tuesday. If surpluses continue to mount he would prefer to see them held in a reserve, he said.

The Minnesota Democrat, chosen Monday to serve as Jimmy Carter's agriculture secretary, said he hoped in the long run to see emphasis on increased grain production to feed "a world that's hungry and expanding in its demand."

"But having said that, may I point out very quickly that the supplies of grain in the world will also be influenced by weather, which is neither predictable nor controllable. We can't tell with any degree of certainty what the economic circumstances will be like next year," Bergland said.

What happens if grain stocks mount and farm prices continue to sag?

"I would prefer, if need be, to store grain for a while rather than have (farmers) controlled by the use of (planting) restrictions," he said.

Bergland, who has continued to operate his 600-acre family grain and lawn seed farm at Roseau, Minn., while serving in Congress, said he plans to comply with Carter's conflict of interest "divestiture requirements" by putting the farm into a blind trust.

But, Bergland added, he told Carter before accepting appointment that "I would not sell my place. It's my home... and I plan to go back there some day." Carter agreed it wouldn't be necessary to sell the farm, Bergland said.

Palouse may yield oil crops

MOSCOW (UPI) — The rolling Palouse hills of eastern Washington could be a source of oil, not from the ground but from a wild flower known as meadowfoam.

Dr. Richard Auld, University of Idaho research scientist, says meadowfoam is a wild flower which, has been domesticated to grow in soggy areas and produces a high grade oil.

It could become a substitute for wheat, lentils, barley and pea crops more familiar in this area.

Auld said the oil can be used in floor waxes, cosmetics, lubrication of fine machinery and transmission fluids.

Auld says no market has yet been developed for meadowfoam and it will be perhaps a decade or more before one is created, the oil could be a substitute for sperm whale oil which has been banned for import into the United States.

Auld said meadowfoam plantings have been made in the northern Idaho areas near Grangeville, Moscow and Bonnets Ferry.

He said University of California researchers report crop yields of up to 1,200 pounds of seed per acre. Approximately 20 to 30 per cent of the seed weight is oil.

The Mischianza, which took place on May 18, 1778, in Philadelphia, was an extravaganza, organized and directed by Captains Andre and De Laney to honor Gen. Howe on his departure as Commander-in-Chief of the British army in America. It featured a grand regatta of decorated barges, gun salutes, a mock tournament between knights, a banquet, fireworks and a concluding exhibition in which an allegorical Fane saluted Howe with the words, "Thy laurels shall never fade," recalls The World Almanac.

After the COR-TEN steel is formed into a 7" pipe in Olson's modern, efficient tube mill, it is thoroughly coated inside and out with high quality alkyl enamel to assure you of far longer maintenance free life.

It has been proven that point applied to COR-TEN will last 1 1/2 to 2 times as long as point applied to ordinary carbon steel.

When galvanized or ordinary painted pipe is chipped or scratched it starts to rust immediately. When COR-TEN is chipped or scratched it forms a tightly adherent oxide that prevents further corrosion and retards undercutting. Thus COR-TEN "heals" itself to protect the metal. Also important, the oxide will not "creep" under surrounding surfaces to cause further flaking.

McNamara 'whiz kid' to head Defense Department

By United Press International
Jimmy Carter's choice for defense secretary is a child prodigy who became a physicist and a nuclear weapons expert at an early age. But foreign policy hard liners charge he may be too soft on Soviet relations.

Harold Brown, 49, was one of former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara's "whiz kids," appointed in 1961 at the age of 33 as director of research and defense engineering in the Pentagon under President Kennedy.

He has been president of the prestigious California Institute of Technology since 1969.

Described as shy, bookish, brilliant, intense and high strung, Brown often doodles and thumps fingers on a desk top when bored by a subject. He describes himself as "not too extroverted, not too easy with people."

Grown, who served as Air Force secretary under President Johnson, first met Carter three years ago and is on a first-name basis with Vice President-elect Walter Mondale, whom he has known for 10 years.

Associates say he has the reputation of being a "skilled advocate of a soft line on defense" and "very strong on arms control" — but at the same time an expert on weapons systems.

Brown served on the U.S. delegation to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks with the Soviets in Helsinki, Vienna and Geneva during the early Nixon administration as a scientific advisor beginning in 1960. Hard liners have charged he was among delegation members who put the talks on a course that was disadvantageous to the United States.

At the same time, he has been said to be responsible almost single-handedly for persuading Lyndon Johnson to continue limited bombing of North Vietnam in 1968, and to have unsuccessfully argued for unlimited bombing when the strikes were halted the following year.

... defense head

Born in New York City Sept. 19, 1927, Brown graduated at the age of 15 with a 99.5 grade average from Bronx High School of Science, a school for gifted children.

Two years later, he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

By the time he was 21, he had received a doctorate in physics at Columbia.

As Air Force Secretary from 1965 to 1969, two of his special interests were reform of the Pentagon's vast bureaucracy in the technical field and programs to make the military service more responsible to civilian leadership.

He publicly differed with McNamara at one time over the relative value of manned bombers to the nation's defense. McNamara preferred concentration on the nuclear missile program but Brown foresaw a mixture of missiles and bombers.

He met his wife, the former Colene D. McDowell of San Francisco, on a skiing trip and they were married Oct. 19, 1953. They have two daughters, Deborah, 21, and Ellen, 18.

Speed change proposed

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — A legislator tired of a "bunch of Arabs" dictating policy to Texans has proposed a bill to increase the state's legal speed limit from 55 miles per hour to 70.

"We've condemned people's land and spent large amounts of the taxpayers' money to build highways designed for 70 miles per hour travel," said Rep. Fred Head, D-Albany.

"We've built automobiles and trucks designed to cruise at that speed."

Head said Texas had suffered more from the 55 mph speed limit than other states because of its size. He said traffic officers were taking abuse because they enforced the limit, and insurance rates were going up because of speeding tickets.

Schlesinger: all-purpose man

By United Press International
James R. Schlesinger, Jimmy Carter's choice to watch over the nation's energy problems, is a brilliant scholar and government veteran who has been described as an "all-purpose man."

He served the Nixon White House in the Office of Management and Budget, as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, head of the Central Intelligence Agency and secretary of defense until he was fired by President Ford last year.

Schlesinger, 45, a classmate of Henry Kissinger's at Harvard, is now at the Johns Hopkins School for Advanced International Studies. He has advised presidential hopefuls Henry Jackson and Ronald Reagan as well as Carter, arguing all the time that the United States needs to increase its military efforts to counter expanding Soviet might.

The pipe-smoking Schlesinger was in China when Chairman Mao Tse-tung died this year and was at his funeral.

Friends said Schlesinger was ousted from the Defense Department's top post because he wanted more for the Pentagon than Ford was willing to provide although the President requested and got the highest Pentagon budget in history this year.

Insiders say Schlesinger's condescending attitude toward those he considers intellectual inferiors, plus an inability to control Pentagon leaks that implied the Soviet Union was cheating on the SALT arms control agreement were more of a factor than anything else.

Sources said Schlesinger wanted either the Defense job back, or another Cabinet level post as a vindication of his abilities. Carter made him assistant to the president for energy issues but it is expected to be elevated to a cabinet job as part of the new administration's reorganization of the bureaucracy.

During his four-months at

... energy chief

the CIA in 1973, Schlesinger forced early retirements and other changes. He instituted the first full-scale investigation, which revealed that the CIA, contrary to its charter, had conducted large-scale domestic spying.

In 1971, as AEC chairman, Schlesinger took his wife and two of his eight children to the Aleutian Islands to demonstrate his belief that a nuclear test there would be safe.

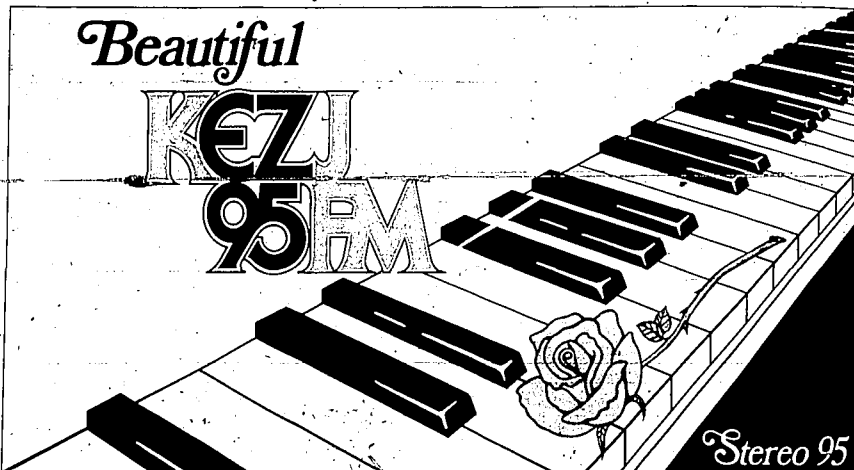

In the Pentagon, Schlesinger promoted a "flexible response" nuclear strategy, arguing that the President would want more choices than either doing nothing or a full-scale nuclear war. Since this might include a single firing of an intercontinental ballistic missile, Schlesinger pushed the Pentagon into building new, more accurate, more powerful warheads.

James Rodney Schlesinger was born in New York City Feb. 15, 1929. He attended Horace Mann School and graduated from Harvard University in 1950 — a classmate of Henry A. Kissinger's. In 1955 he was on faculty of the University of Virginia and in 1963, became a consultant of the Rand Corp. "think tank."

Schlesinger is married to the former Rachel Mellinger, a Lutheran who has converted from Judaism, he lists as his hobbies bird watching, composing folk ballads and reading.

Ted Sorensen: no stranger to government limelight

By United Press International
Ted Sorensen, named by Jimmy Carter to head the Central Intelligence Agency, is no stranger to the government limelight.

He was a close adviser and speechwriter for President John F. Kennedy and wherever the Kennedy family went in the golden years, Ted Sorensen was somewhere in the background.

Sorensen, 48, did much of the historical research when then Sen. John F. Kennedy wrote "Profiles in Courage."

He often helped Kennedy the presidential candidate write speeches and position papers.

And he became President Kennedy's right hand man in the White House. The 6-foot-tall, scholarly adviser and writer was one of the group of inside decision-makers during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

Sorensen ran unsuccessfully for Robert F. Kennedy's Senate seat in 1970. He lost in the New York Democratic primary.

Sorensen said he "worked on" the television address made by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., after a young girl was killed when the senator's car went off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island.

Theodore Chalkin Sorensen was born May 8, 1928, in Lincoln, Neb., the son of C. A. Sorensen, one of the liberal Republicans who supported Sen. George Norris, R-Neb. He went to the University of Nebraska, finally graduating Phi Beta Kappa. He stayed to get a law degree.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas, D-Ill., recommended Sorensen to Kennedy. The two men liked each other immediately, and Sorensen became Kennedy's chief lieutenant and alter ego throughout the Senate years and in the White House.

After Kennedy was assassinated, Sorensen stayed until Jan. 15, 1964, when he resigned to write a book. "Kennedy" became a best-seller and was serialized widely in magazines and newspapers.

Sorensen joined the New York law firm of Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton and Garrison, and has stayed there since he left government. Sorensen burns his bridges behind him. On July 14, 1961, he went back to McCook, Neb., to substitute for Kennedy at a dinner in Norris' honor. He attacked schools like the ones he attended back home, and Nebraska itself, he said, was "old, outmoded, a place to leave or a place to die."

Electronic games may hurt TVs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government is trying to determine if those electronic video games so popular as gifts this Christmas can damage television picture tubes.

Officials said the Federal Trade Commission staff is exploring the possibility of a full-scale investigation, but a spokesman warned against jumping to any conclusion about the games being harmful.

"We are conducting a staff investigation to determine if there is some adverse impact by these games on TV receivers," one official said. "But at this point there's no determination. You can't imply there's a problem just because there's an investigation. We're trying to be balanced."

Electronic ping-pong, tennis and similar games are a hot-selling Christmas item due to recent mass production and technological improvements, which have brought the price of many of them down to under $100.

An independent newsletter, "FTC Watch," said the agency will approve and announce a full investigation later this week. It quoted commission sources as stressing that there is no sufficient evidence to show the games can in fact damage a picture tube, but the staff wants to make sure.

If approved, it would be the second FTC check on a big-selling Christmas item. Last month the agency said it was monitoring advertising and promotion for citizens band radios to make sure consumers were being led by these games on TV receivers, with an expanded selection of channels would be on the market after Jan. 1.

FTC Watch said more than 35 million of the video games have been sold, to the tune of $242 million a year.

The newsletter said one discount catalog retail store has been using a hand-lettered sign on one of the game products, warning shoppers that a permanent imprint might be left on the TV screen after prolonged use.

QUESTION: If you had only one wish for Christmas what would it be?

Carolyn Hoppersiad, Twin Falls:

Peace and happiness for everyone—both peace in the world and for people individually.

Dick Diamond, Twin Falls:
Continued good health. One can't afford to go to a doctor or get sick because of the terrible costs of medical care. It scares you to death to think of the cost of doctor bills.

Dwayne Burgess, Ely, Nev., formerly Buhl:

Maybe it would be better to have Christmas every third year instead of each year. I'd wish to have the commercialism taken out of Christmas and the family put back in. When I was a kid you didn't have to pay for it (Christmas). It would be nice to have another old-fashioned family Christmas, with all the relatives there. In our family someone always acted as Santa and distributed the gifts.

Virginia Becker, Buhl:
I would wish for peace because it affects everyone—family and all. That's what Christmas is all about. If you have peace, people would be better and there wouldn't be so much violent crime. And there would be no need for old people shopping because they are actually hungry.

Lorna Scellick, Twin Falls:

I wish it would snow so we could go skiing. I went to Sun Valley last week and tried the artificial snow. It's pretty good—a little icy, but o.k. All I can go is about twice a month.

Enoch Wall, Buhl:
I'd wish for a square meal for everyone, regardless of color or race. I don't think people are taken advantage of too much from businessmen because of the competition sort of taking care of that. But everyone, no matter what his race, is entitled to the same treatment.

Ray Crandall, Twin Falls:

I would wish for peace and prosperity. That means civil peace within the United States and also peace between nations. Prosperity is necessary too as far as I'm concerned, since I'm in business. Peace is not much good without prosperity.

Daren Garey, 4, Twin Falls:

An electric train. (Daren's mother, Mrs. Lloyd Garey, said this was the first time he had mentioned this wish. Other requests for Christmas have been such things as a $5 Million Man and other toys such as Spider-Man advertised on TV.)

Life is good

A special typewriter is used in Larry Ek's home to produce Christmas cards for children in the area. This community response to his need two years ago and raised a total of $15,000. The money was used to get him to New York City where he had a brain pacemaker implanted in his skull, to control the spasms caused by cerebral palsy.

Henry who?

The big New York publishing houses fear the American people will be asking "Henry who?" about Secretary of State Kissinger by the time his memoirs appear three years from now. The reports of a multi-million dollar deal for his works are basically accurate, despite denials by some publishers. See p. 15.

Larry Ek continues his battle in life ... as brain pacemaker goes on the blink

Vietim fights on

LARRY EK stands outside his home with a sign advertising his work in the background.

By PAIGE CHERNO
Times News writer

TWIN FALLS — Larry Ek has turned off his brain pacemaker.

Painful headaches and broken parts of the wire that replaced caused Larry, a cerebral palsy victim, to shut off the device that had given him so much hope a year ago.

A year-long fund raising drive by community individuals, businesses and organizations made possible Larry's trips to New York City, the operation in October of 1975 and subsequent hospital care.

Bills totaling about $15,000 have been paid, but Larry, now 25, "is just the same as he was before the surgery," his sister says.

For a while after the implant of the electronic brain stimulator, Larry did get better.

"Every so often, I was doing something I couldn't do before," says Larry, who walks and speaks with difficulty and has little control over his hand and arm movements.

Larry says his family and friends noticed initial improvement more than he did. His sister, Sherry Bridger, says he was "more relaxed, he could open his hands and his speech was a little bit better."

But then external parts of the device broke down and the headaches started. A crucial battery began to fall off every time Larry tried to hook it onto the box he wears on his belt. The box was cracked, Larry says, even before he left the hospital. A wire "antenna," which hooks to his chest and the box, has broken three times. Larry said doctors told him before he left the hospital over a year ago they had ordered a new box.

Until this week, the family's letters to the New York neurosurgeons who performed the operation had not been answered; their phone calls to St. Barnabas Hospital had not gotten as far as the doctors.

When asked about the delay, an administrative assistant to Dr. I.S. Cooper, the physician who invented the implant, told the Times-News earlier this week she was not at liberty to disclose information about a patient.

Two days later, someone in the office called Larry's mother and told her she would "go back to the doctor and find out what was going on." But, Mrs. Ek said, the caller denied that the office was aware of the problem until the doctors received a recent letter from Larry.

Larry received a notice a couple months ago to arrange for a follow-up appointment with his doctors. Angry with them for "not keeping their word about the box and the wire," Larry wrote to them, saying there was "no need for a checkup" since he had turned off the device late in the summer.

While lapsing sometimes into such "a bad mood," Larry remains optimistic that the parts will come.

"My friends told me I could have a lawsuit if I want it, but I'm going to wait. Who knows? Maybe someday I'll get the box."

"Being handicapped all my life, I've waited for a lot of things, and this is another thing you wait for," Larry says.

Despite the malfunctioning parts and the headaches, which continued even after Larry turned off the pacemaker, he doesn't consider last year's operation a failure.

With proper medical attention, Larry says he feels his improvement would have continued. He has only praise for the operation.

"But I can't just hop on a plane every time the thing breaks down," he adds.

The operation is new and, according to Larry, he could not have had it anywhere in the West. Consequently, no one locally knows enough about the operation to help him.

Larry hasn't seen his local general practitioner, who used to treat him with a muscle relaxant, for six years because he says "we can't do nothing for me."

Twin Falls has no practicing neurologist and Larry claims even his Boise neurosurgeon, who contacted the New York doctors, doesn't know much about the operation. He wouldn't know how to check a "needle-like" feeling Larry has had in his chest lately.

Larry was forced to turn to a local TV repairman to fix his broken wire.

"Then he said he couldn't do it anymore. The wire are so tiny — it was a big gamble," Larry says.

Knowing what he knows now, Larry says he "would wait until they get something local" if he had the operation to do over again. By local he means Boise, Salt Lake City or even Seattle, some place he could afford to travel to for follow-up care.

The first operation cost Larry, his family and area fund raisers close to $15,000. Through the fund raising drive begun two years ago, the community raised about $11,000.

"I owe them," Larry says. "But there's no way I could pay them back besides saying 'thank you' and being their friend."

Larry says he didn't "feel right" about the campaign.

"I'm not the kind of person who asks for things. I was going to save my money for this thing.

"But once the campaign started, I couldn't stop it if I wanted to," he says.

He worried too that "the town was going to be disappointed in me."

While he had been warned that any positive results of the new operation would be gradual, "the people here in town thought this thing would work overnight," Larry says.

On the plane trip home, he recalls, he wondered what the people who had made the surgery possible would think. He was afraid, at first, of going through town on his special three-wheeled bicycle.

"I'm used to people looking at me," Larry explains. "But everyone would look at everything I did to see if I did it easier than I did before."

"I tried, but the more I tried, the harder it got," he adds.

"You used to see Larry out a lot and talking to people on the streets," his sister says. "But he feels kind of guilty ... and it's not his fault."

Larry admits that he enjoys being somewhat of a celebrity in the area.

"I'll made me feel great," Larry says. "When someone he didn't even know would come up to him and say,

"Hi, Larry."

Larry received national media attention during his brief engagement to Sherry Hamilton, a cerebral palsy victim from Ft. Worth, Tex.

They were evaluated for the operation in New York at the same time. Larry admits he had been half-hoping he wouldn't get the okay, but felt better about it knowing he and his fiancée would both be going through the same thing.

Sherry had her operation first.

"I stood behind her and I thought she would stand behind me, too," Larry says. "So I was looking forward to my operation."

But he was in her operation and she, a couple months later, Sherry lived up with him. He recalls becoming scared again about the surgery.

During the weeks he spent in the hospital, Larry didn't hear from her at all.

His attempts to visit Sherry and reach her by phone have been unsuccessful.

"I think the operation changed her personality," Larry theorizes. "The doctor said that was possible."

"To this day, I don't know what happened," Larry says. "It sounds baffled but not bitter. 'She was a lovely person.'"

Larry says his life "has been about the same" despite his celebrity status.

He doesn't let his handicap stifle his independence or confine him to Twin Falls.

Larry moved out of his parents' home in 1972 after a two-month adventure in Texas as a traveling magazine salesman.

He doesn't go into detail, but smiles and says the summer "was fun."

"I got to see the country. If I had the chance to do it again, I think I would," he adds.

"When I got back home, I was independent, used to being on my own." He has lived by himself since a roommate got married about three years ago and, he adds, he is currently buying a new home.

Larry runs a typing and copying service from his home. His current project is typing up letters from Santa for area youngsters on the special typewriter provided to him by Magic Valley-Rehabilitation Services, Inc.

"I like that kind of work," Ek says. "I've been typing since I was six years old."

Larry attended Twin Falls schools and has unpleasant memories of the special education program.

He says teachers would keep him from going at a fast enough pace.

"It was easy for me and I told them I wanted some harder work." Only one teacher responded to his request.

Not one to sit back and take things, Larry finally went to the school board with his complaint when he was in high school.

"I told them I was going to quit because they were keeping me behind."

The board gave him the option of taking a high school equivalency test.

"I took that test. I barely made it, but I got it and got to graduate in 1971," Larry says, obviously proud of his victory.

He thought he would miss going to school, but says now he learned more once he was out.

"I learned how to manage my own money. I just learned life and how to keep going," he says.

Larry's typing and copying service has not been all that profitable, but he's optimistic.

"It's tough to get a business going. And I'm not going to give up until I see some profit coming in." He adds emphatically, "I don't give up."

When he's not working, Larry likes to play pool with a special cue stick he invented. "Out of five games, I can win three," he volunteers.

He also writes country-western songs. When he's "in the mood," he puts them down on paper. He's written out about 10 in the last three years.

"I write the words down and sing to myself out loud." He doesn't write down the music, so he lets people who read the lyrics think up their own music.

He says most of his songs are typically sad country songs "about a guy who lost his lover." He says he was writing the tear-jerkers long before he met Sherry.

Larry says he's looking forward to a Christmas celebration with his family. Then he wants "to take off and be by myself for awhile."

"It's time to get out again — until I go to New York," he adds.

Larry has neither funds nor plans to go back to New York in the foreseeable future. But he has been "trying all my life" to do something about his condition, and the disappointment of the past year has not stopped his dreaming.

"I know what's going to happen when I walk into the office in New York. They'd make me have another operation. I'm scared to go back," he admits.

Referring to a post-operative bout with pneumonia, Larry says, "I came awfully close last time to not making it."

For the next operation, Larry explains, he would have to stay awake while the doctors enter his brain.

"They freeze the brain cells that aren't working and then they tell you to open up your hands. If you can't do it, they keep asking you and checking different brain cells."

Larry says, "I want to go back," he says. "After a pause, he adds, 'But not right now.'"

For the moment, Larry would be happy to get the new box and wire or at least some news about them.

But while he waits, Larry doesn't waste his time feeling sorry for himself.

"God put me on the earth like this for some kind of reason and sometime I'll find out why," he philosophizes.

"Everybody feels sorry for themselves, but I don't feel sorry for myself for being handicapped."

He considers himself fortunate.

"I look around and see people in bad shape. I'm lucky. I can get around and take care of myself and they can't."

BY ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN
HENRY WHO?

It's hard to believe, but that's the question the big New York publishing houses fear the American people will be asking about Secretary of State Kissinger, by the time his memoirs appear three years from now. By then, the publishers say, there'll be new names, new faces, new crises.

Still, the reports of a multi-million dollar deal for his books and other works are basically accurate — despite denials by some publishers.

Q: Who's the front-runner to play Judy Holliday in the film-bio of her tragic life? — A.W., Trenton, N.J.

A: By the time you read this, Bernadette Peters may have been signed. However, Terri Garr, Brenda Vaccaro, Stockard Channing and Madeline Kahn have shown interest, depending on how good and truthful the script will be.

ROYAL SCANDAL: London publishing circles are buzzing over a new "novel" called "The Corfu Kid" which is being peddled abroad.

The main character is patterned somewhat after Britain's Prince Philip, who spent part of his youth on the spectacular Greek Island of Corfu.

The manuscript makes wild reading but the contents are so scurrilous, publishers are afraid to touch it. There's even talk that Royal pressure will be brought to bear if any publisher gets nervy enough to take the book.

MONEY WORRIES: A major singer loses money every time he appears in Las Vegas — even though he gets top dollar. Certain people he feels indebted to are gambling away most of what he earns at the local gaming tables.

Q: Since Barry Manilow's become such a big music star, does he still have time to write and sing TV commercials and jingles? — G.L., Springfield, Ill.

A: Time is not the problem. Barry became a millionaire by writing or performing or arranging, or sometimes all three, for such popular TV spots as the commercials for McDonald's, Pepsi, Chevrolet, and Band-Aids, among others.

However, his new Aristo Record contract forbids his continuing in this highly lucrative field. And Barry now regrets that he made such a bad business deal. To chase away his blues, though, he's been doing Karen Carpenter.

Q: Who's distributing the tickets to the Carter inauguration? — P.L., Denver

A: It's being handled through the banks of Atlanta. And the big Washington, D.C., banks, which have always had the privilege, are furious. Their current wise-crack is that Carter's planning to have so many thousands of admirers on hand, that he'll have to hire the ballpark — and serve Big Macs for everybody.

Q: Having just seen "Marathon Man" I can't believe that Sir Laurence Olivier was deathly ill in recent years. What's the real story? He certainly looks the picture of health. — I.W., Concord, N.H.

A: Lord Olivier has been near death three times in the last seven years. In 1967 he got cancer, in 1970 he suffered a thrombosis, and then in 1974 he was felled by the mysterious disease, myositis, which attacks the muscles and left him unable to move, walk, or talk. The actor, now 69, has recovered from all three illnesses.

Q: Among married couples of child-bearing age in the United States, are there any figures as to what per cent do practice birth control? — L.S., Princeton, N.J.

A: Only 9 per cent do not practice birth control, according to the last study done by the National Survey of Family Growth. The way the figures break down: 70 per cent are using contraceptives, 7 per cent have a sterility problem, 14 per cent are trying for a baby — leaving 9 per cent.

ROD STEWART

... Britt is restless

Q: Is Mary Tyler Moore going to retire now that she's ending her television series? — P.J., Cleveland.

A: Mary's one of those workaholics, and until this season, one of CBS's top-rated stars. That's why she and CBS have signed a long-range, multi-million dollar contract calling for some specials next season and then a new series in 1978. Mary would also like to get the movie rights to NBC correspondent Betty Rollins' book, "First You Cry." A number of actresses are trying to get their hands on the book Rollins did on her mastery. It's one of the few properties that offers a stellar part for a woman.

... film-bio coming

Q: A million years ago when Greta Garbo spoke her first words in a movie there was much hoopla. What, for heaven's sake, were her first words? — V.T., Atlanta.

A: You won't want to believe this, but Garbo's first words in the film "Anna Christie" were: "Gimme whisky, ginger ale on the side — and don't be stingy, baby."

EMBARRASSED AMBASSADOR: British envoy, Sir Peter Ramsbotham, thought he'd scored a real coup in Washington the other day by successfully luring the Jimmy Carter transition team to dinner. The Carter people, up to then, had rejected all invitations. Sir Peter figured he was beating other diplomats to the punch in getting first word on the Carter plans and policies. The Carter team showed up all right and were charming over a long and sumptuous repast. But it was they, not the Americans, who did the quaking. What Sir Peter discovered about the new Administration's plans for England and the world in general was — exactly nothing.

Q: Is rock idol Rod Stewart ever going to marry Britt Ekland? — S.S., Tallahassee, Fla.

A: Who knows for sure, but after two years together, Rod probably would have popped the big question to Britt, if he ever was going to. Now it seems she's getting mighty restless about her casual status, and has threatened to take a walk if he doesn't make her his legal wife very soon.

RUMOR OF THE WEEK: Our source at ABC says that Barbara Walters has been really upset at the bad press she has been getting for her work on the news show. A couple of weeks ago Barbara went in and threatened to resign. She wasn't having a tantrum or putting, says the insider, just angry.

Q: I'm a big Bette Davis fan and have never read anything about her parents. What can you tell me? — H.H., Pittsburgh

A: Bette was raised by her mother, Ruthie, who made great sacrifices to help her daughter launch her career. Her parents were divorced when Bette was 7 and she hardly ever saw her father. A patient attorney, Bette was quoted as saying, "My father was one of the cruelest, most fatherlike creatures that ever walked the earth. So I don't think I missed having a father."

WISH YOU'D ASKED THIS ONE: What's happening at the sedate and dignified Reader's Digest? Management at the Reader's Digest is getting ready for a rebellion of its women staffers. The female editors are planning to sue the magazine for discrimination against women. Interestingly enough, the Digest has thrown open its files to the lawyers representing the women, and given their legal counsel the names of all the top-flight female editors they have tried in vain to hire in recent years.

Q: Have you heard anything about a foundation that is changing the composition of human blood as a way of fighting old age? — G.L., Chicago

A: The Orentreich Foundation in New York has been quietly doing research which involves lowering the number of white cells in the blood of adults. The still-being-tested theory is that the white cells contribute to aging and by reducing the number of white in relation to the red, the aging process can be slowed down. Remember, this investigation is still in the early research stage and has a long way to go.

Q: I hear that Paul Michael Glaser wants out of "Starsky & Hutch." Is this possible? — L.O., Detroit

A: Glaser, like many performers who've become overnight stars via TV, has filed suit against the executive producers of his hit series, claiming violations of his contract. Since the producers are Aaron Spelling and Len Goldstein — two of the toughest veterans in the TV game — Glaser has a real battle on his hands. "We can always just call it 'Hutch,'" was the immediate response to Glaser's suit.

Q: I've always heard that All MacGraw and Steve McQueen have wanted to do a movie together. How come they seem to sign up for separate pictures? — D.L., The Bronx

A: We think they're going to try togetherness in the $10 million version of "Harold Robbins' The Betsy." The McQueens got interested in the project as soon as a class actor like Laurence Olivier agreed to a role.

TINY TIM

... comeback underway

Q: How is Tiny Tim doing since his automobile accident? I always thought he was a talented man. — L.G., Easton, Md.

A: Tiny Tim seems to be trying to make a comeback. He's been performing at nightclubs and fairs all over the country, along with Harve and Charée, a vocal duo. Tiny Tim has been getting standing ovations every time — so we'd say the news is good.

Family rites rules adopted

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — South Korean weddings, funeral rites and tombs must be toned down to fit local families may face fines of up to $1,045, the Health-Social Affairs Ministry said Monday.

The crackdown came after President Park Chung-hee remarked at a cabinet meeting that some tombs were so ornate they tended to cause public indignation and could affect national harmony and unity, the ministry said.

The government adopted family rites regulations in 1973 that has printed announcements of weddings and funerals, outdoor displays of flowers on such occasions, and gift-giving at such functions.

The officials said families with tombs too large or expensively decorated will be subject to punishment under the regulations. Authorities will also watch for other possible violations such as luxurious weddings, they said.

TV star scene

Production has begun on the third of NBC's Best Sellers entitled "Seventh Avenue," a six-hour drama set in New York's bustling garment district. Chosen to play the lead was Steven Keats, the very talented young actor featured in such films as "Death Wish," "The Gambler," "The Friends of Eddie Coyle," and "Hester Street." Keats will play Jay Blackman, a young man who climbs from poverty on New York's Lower East Side to wealth in the garment industry. Co-stars chosen so far for the production are: Dori Brenner, Anne Archer and Jane Seymour, as the women in Blackman's life, plus Ray Mitchell, Alan King, Herschel Bernardi, Kristoffer Tabori and Jack Gildard.

Andy Williams, a six-time Grammy Award nominee, will host this year's 19th annual Grammy Awards Show, live from the Hollywood Palladium, Feb. 19. On Jan. 31 the television audiences of America will be treated to an attempt by daredevil Evel Knievel to jump his bike over the world's largest indoor salt water pool, which will be stocked with sharks. "Man-eating killer sharks." The event will be the climax of a CBS special, "Evel Knievel's Death Defiers," which will broadcast live from various locales across the country where other daredevils will be performing their specialties.

The major portion of ABC's "One of the New York opening night of 'Hellzapoppin' the new musical revue starring Jerry Lewis, will be telecast as part of a Big Event special about bringing a show to Broadway. The production includes Lynn Barrie, Herb Edelman and Joey Faye. Opening night is Feb. 13. This is Lewis' Broadway debut. Fashion model and actress Lauren Hutton has been cast for a co-starring role in NBC's Best Sellers: "The Rhiemmann Exchange," the five-hour drama currently filming in Mexico.

Jeanne Wolf continues to have the most insightful interviews with show business types on the air this year. Upcoming on her PBS show in January are Charlton Heston, David Susskind and Joan Fontaine. Comedian Richard Pryor is set for a special this spring, which will be a test for a possible series. Rex Howard moves on to a bit more serious drama than Happy Days, when he stars in Sherwood Anderson's "I'm a Fool." The drama will kick off a seven-week PBS series of stories by American authors in April. William Goldman's "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "Marathon Man" best-selling novel, "Boys and Girls Together," is being adapted as a 12-part series by MTM Enterprises for January, 1978, on NBC.

Impressionist Rich Little plays his first starring role in a straight drama when he plays a self-appointed avenger of a girl who died from a drug overdose on the Jan. 6 installment of Hawaii Five-O. Mel Ferrer costars as a priest. ABC has announced five new series for early-1977. One of the comedies, Fish, gives Abe Vigoda of Barney Miller the solo outing he was promised some time ago. Florence Stanley plays his long-suffering wife Bernice. In the show, the two adopt five disadvantaged kids. Nancy Walker is also being given another crack at a workable comedy for her talents.

Paraplegic loses wheelchair in accident

COCOA BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Although she survived a hit-and-run accident, Diana Seiver has lost—the "indispensable stool" upon which she has relied for four years and can't afford a new one.

Diana, 17 and partially paralyzed as the result of an accidental gunshot wound, was crossing a highway Friday night in her $1,000 electric wheelchair with red reflectors when a car sped toward her.

The car hit her, knocking her to the pavement, while the empty wheel chair careened 60 feet down the highway. Police said it was "beyond repair."

Diana said she faintly remembers a girl driver and a boy getting out of the car. "The girl kept saying, 'I didn't see you. Can I go? I've never hit anyone before.'"

"Then the boy picked me up and dropped me in the chair. Then they drove off," Diana said.

Her mother, Linda Seiver said that unless the wheelchair is replaced, Diana "will not be allowed to go back to school after Christmas, which will be a pity because she was to start driver's education in a car equipped for one-hand control."

A divorcee, Mrs. Seiver said she receives $300 a month in welfare and Social Security.
